ABSTRACT

Two catalogs inventory field-recorded wax cylinders which document the music and language of Indian tribes in northeastern and southeastern United States from 1890-1930. The Northeastern Indian Catalog contains entries for 738 cylinders comprising 16 music and spoken word collections from the Chippewa, Fox, Iroquois, Kickapoo, Menominee, Passamaquoddy, Sauk, Shawnee, and Winnebago. The Southeastern Indian Catalog contains entries for 268 cylinders comprising 6 music and spoken word collections from the Alabama, Catawba, Cherokee, Chitimacha, Choctaw, and Seminole. Each catalog has its own introductory chapter and is divided into alphabetically arranged segments representing individual tribes or culture groups; cylinders in each segment are listed alphabetically by collector or collection. Introductions to each segment summarize basic information of scope, recording locations and dates, institutional affiliations, collectors, and collection characteristics. Bibliographies list published and unpublished materials. Catalog entries refer to individual cylinders and contain cylinder number, Archive of Folk Culture number, number assigned by collector, duration and quality of cylinder, collector's description of contents, performer, recording location and date, and notes containing technical information about sound quality, textual clarification, and genre classification. Maps show sites of field recordings. Photographs of collectors and performers appear throughout. Concordances accompany two large collection segments. (LFL)

THE AMERICAN FOLKLIFE CENTER

The American Folklife Center was established by the Congress of the United States in 1976 with the passage of Public Law 94-201, the American Folklife Preservation Act. The center is charged with "preserving and presenting American folklife" through programs of research, documentation, archival preservation, live presentation, exhibition, publication, dissemination, training, and other activities involving folk traditions in the United States.

The center's program has been arranged to fulfill four major goals: the coordination of folk cultural activities, assistance to folklife agencies and specialists in various parts of the country, research and archival service, and model programs and publications.

The Archive of Folk Culture

The Archive of Folk Culture became part of the American Folklife Center in 1978. Since its founding in 1928, the archive has assembled at the Library of Congress one of the most significant collections of folklife materials in the world. It controls audio recordings containing folksong, folk music, folk tales, oral history, and other forms of traditional expression; holds over seventy thousand pages of manuscript material; and maintains a reading room with books and periodicals dealing with folk music and folklore chosen from the thousands of relevant items in the Library's collections.

As part of its reference service, the archive prepares and publishes numerous guides, finding aids, bibliographies, and discographies which are available to the public at no charge. It has also published LP recordings of folk music and folklore, available for purchase at the Library or by mail.

PREFACE

In 1979 the American Folklife Center at the Library of Congress inaugurated the Federal Cylinder Project to duplicate onto preservation tape, document, and catalog field-recorded wax cylinders located in the Library's Archive of Folk Culture and in other federal agencies. Of the approximately ten thousand cylinders or tape copies of cylinders in the archive's collection, almost seven thousand document the music and language of nearly one hundred forty Native American groups. Many of these cylinders were recorded under the auspices of the Bureau of American Ethnology by pioneers in the developing disciplines of anthropology, linguistics, folklore, and ethnomusicology. They contain material of enormous cultural and historical value both for scholars and for the peoples among whom the cylinders were recorded.

The Northeast and the Southeast catalogs which comprise this volume are the first two of ten catalogs devoted to American Indian collections in the Federal Cylinder Project series. Because of the amount of American Indian material, the cylinders have been grouped into catalogs which correspond generally to the culture areas outlined in George P. Murdock and Timothy J. O'Leary's Ethnographic Bibliography of North America (New Haven: HRAF Press, 1975). These catalogs are bound into six separate volumes: Northeast and Southeast; Plains; Plateau/Great Basin, Northwest Coast/Eskimo, and California; Southwest—Navajo; Southwest—Pueblo; and Southwest—Apache, Papago, and Others, and Middle and South America.

How To Use This Catalog

The Northeast and the Southeast catalogs have the same general format but contain modifications to this format based upon the requirements of the individual collections encompassed by the catalogs. Although they are bound into one volume, each catalog is a distinct unit with its own foreword or general introduction and bibliography. We have divided the catalogs into alphabetically arranged segments representing individual culture groups; within each catalog segment, the cylinders are arranged alphabetically by collector or collection.

Introductions preceding the entries for each of the collections summarize basic information concerning the scope, recording locations and dates, institutional affiliation or sponsor, coworkers, and special restrictions surrounding the collection. The introductions also provide information about the documentation used in preparing the entries, including references to published and unpublished manuscripts, transcriptions, fieldnotes, and related correspondence.

Catalog entries refer to individual cylinders, which have been used as the basic organizing unit for the catalog. Because each collection is unique, a flexible catalog format has been designed that can be modified to fit a collection's particular requirements:

CYLINDER NO.
The number assigned by the Archive of Folk Culture to original cylinders in the collections of the Library of Congress.

AFS NO.
The reference number assigned to each disc or tape reel by the Archive of Folk Culture. This entry includes the location of each cylinder on a reel. Cylinders duplicated during the term of the Federal Cylinder Project have AFS numbers in the 19,000 and 20,000 series.

ORIGINAL NO.
The number assigned to a cylinder by the collector or sponsoring institution. Designations for this category may vary for different collections. In the case of the Frances Densmore recordings, the designation ORIGINAL NO. has been supplemented or replaced by BAE CAT. NO. (Bureau of American Ethnology catalog number). See below.

TIME

The duration of an entire cylinder or of segments of a cylinder if dubbed separately, from the beginning to the end of the cylinder noise. The starting times of individual bands or items on a cylinder are given in brackets in the section labeled DESCRIPTION.

QUALITY

Relative sound quality of the original cylinder. Special technical problems pertaining to the sound or condition of the cylinder are included in the NOTES.

DESCRIPTION

The collector's assigned title(s) or identification of the contents of a cylinder. Editorial notations, enclosed in brackets, include the starting time of individual bands or items on a cylinder as well as supplementary information clarifying elements in the basic description. Timings are given for the first program segment only if it starts more than fifteen seconds after the cylinder begins. Multiple renditions or verses of a song are not indicated unless the singing is broken by long pauses or specific markers such as extended whoops. Brackets also enclose descriptions or designations for songs not identified by the collector.

PERFORMER

The name and identification of the performer, if known. Densmore used performer numbers in addition to BAE catalog numbers; these appear in parentheses next to the performer's name. Performer numbers surmised from contextual evidence and for songs not listed in her published monographs appear in brackets.

LOCATION

The site where the recording was made; included only if it varies within a collection.

DATE

The date of the original recording, if known; included only if it varies within a collection.

NOTES

The annotation for each cylinder. This includes specific technical information concerning the sound quality of a cylinder, using the following terminology:

Beating:	rhythmic knocking caused by deep scratches or cracks across the grooves of a cylinder.
Echo:	faint but pronounced repetition of recorded signal caused by improper or double carving of grooves on the cylinder.
Machine noise:	audible hum or rumble of cylinder recorder.
Speed fluctuations:	wobbling sound caused by uneven machine speed.
Speed warp:	a distortion of sound caused by the needle being placed upon the cylinder before the speed of the machine was stabilized, or in the middle or end of the program if the cylinder machine wound down.
Surface noise:	noise caused by exudation or mold on the cylinder.

The notes also include indications of reference pitches, announcements, breaks or pauses in the recorded program, and other unusual occurrences. The documentation is taken from accompanying correspondence, labels on cylinders and boxes, published and unpublished manuscripts, and announcements recorded on the cylinder itself by the collector.

Modifications to this basic format are described in the introductions to each collection.

About the Densmore Recordings

In a letter dated August 4, 1940, Frances Densmore offered the following advice to John M. Cooper, an anthropology professor at the Catholic University of America who was about to go into the field to record Gros Ventres music:

> I do not know the Presto machine, which you are to use, but may have a chance to look it up in the meantime. The dealer will give you full instructions for using it, and the operating of the machine is of secondary importance. The psychology of managing the Indians so as to secure the best songs, sung in the desired manner, is the most important factor in the work, in my opinion. I will take pleasure in giving you the benefit of my experience in this regard. I had to formulate my > own method, but I find that it gives equally good results in all tribes. It is gratifying to know that you are to preserve the Gros Ventres songs. As you know, there are some songs of this group in my "Mandan and Hidatsa Music," though I used only the term "Hidatsa."

She appended a page of notes which summarized her nearly forty years of cylinder recording experience:

> Before actual recording is begun, it is sometimes a good plan to have an "open house" where everyone is shown the apparatus, sees it in use, and, perhaps, some test records may be made at that time—so all curiosity is satisfied. This may be followed by a promise that everyone can come again, and hear the records, if they will keep away while work is in progress.
> Only the interpreter and singer should be present when songs are recorded unless they want a "witness" or someone to consult.
> Only one singer at a time, unless the records are for "exhibition purposes," and to show concerted singing.
> An Indian drum does not record well, and a rattle does not record at all. A short stick on a pasteboard box gives the percussion without resonance, which is all that is wanted unless the records are for exhibition use—or unless the Presto works differently from the phonograph. That can be determined by experiment.
> Each song should be sung through several times, followed by a distinct pause. Singers should not be allowed to "run their songs together."
> It is safest to get information before recording the song. Translations can safely follow the recording.
> All "yells" must be strictly forbidden, if the records are to be transcribed. It is also a waste of space on the blank to let them "talk", and announce the song in the native language etc.
> It does not pay to have them "rehearse" a song audibly—they should "run it over in their mind," then record it. Often, a "rehearsal," which is not recorded, is better than the recording.
> The singer must never be allowed to think that he is in charge of the work. A strict hold must be kept on him.
> Singers should be checked by general reputation. Loud voices are not essential, and men who sing at dances are apt to be too free-and-easy.
> It is not wise to take too many songs from one singer, nor let a man sing too long at a time.

The song was the basic organizing unit for Densmore's studies of American Indian music. While in the field, she assigned a consecutive performer number and occasionally a field number to each complete song on a cylinder. Individual songs were carefully examined and considered for inclusion in her monographs for the Bureau of American Ethnology; those selected for publication were given separate catalog and serial numbers (assigned sequentially to each song in the order in which it appears in a monograph) and genre series letters—for example, Duck Dance song (a). Her criteria for selecting a particular song were not always clear; she seems to have been more interested in melody than in text, genre, or individual performance. Notations on the labels of cylinder boxes suggest that she would "discard" a song because it sounded too much like another or because it was, for her, not interesting. Occasionally, this meant either shaving and reusing a cylinder or throwing the cylinder away altogether.

When she supervised the early transfer of some of her cylinders to aluminum and acetate discs at the Library of Congress in the 1940s, the resulting engineer's log reflected her philosophy. Since Densmore had apparently intended the recordings to supplement her monograph series—some recorded anthologies were subsequently published by the Library—the cylinders were duplicated in BAE-catalog rather than performer-number order. Frequently, for cylinders on which there were several songs, the entire cylinder was duplicated but only one BAE number appeared in the log. Because her numbering systems are often inconsistent from one collection to another, and sometimes within a single collection, variations will be explained in the introductions to each Densmore segment.

Densmore's approach to American Indian music study and her preoccupation with publications create problems in comparing the recordings with transcriptions, monographs, and other documentary material. Her published transcriptions are essentially melodic outlines and generally ignore elements of performance such as inflections, paramusical elements, multiple voices, drum and rattle beats, and repetitions. Songs Densmore labeled "repetition" and "duplicate" are often individual variants of a song rather than duplicates in any strict sense. But it should also be remembered that she was working with an enormous amount of material, nearly two thousand cylinders and several dozen culture groups. Her legacy to Native Americans and scholars is invaluable.

The work of documenting and identifying the contents of many of these collections could not have been completed without the assistance of a number of researchers and cultural specialists throughout the country. We are particularly indebted to Morrie Abrams, Rita P. Altvater, Edward Bassett, Jr., James Billie, Susie Billie, Wilbur Blackdeer, Thomas Blumer, Janette Czarnecki, David Draper, David Francis, Charlotte Heth, Annie Jimmie, Betty Mae Jumper, Nancy O. Lurie, Daniel and Rosella Mallory, Ralph Mann, Nancy McInturff, Pauline Sky, Dewey Smoke, the late Martin Stacy, William Sturtevant, the late Emanuel Thundercloud and his wife Agnes, Thomas Vennum, Jr., Lawrence Walker, Benjamin Winneshiek, Eli Youngthunder, and staff members at the American Philosophical Society Library in Philadelphia, the Anthropology Department of the Milwaukee Public Museum, the Burton Historical Collection at the Detroit Public Library, the National Anthropological Archives of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Peabody Museum at Harvard University.

NORTHEASTERN INDIAN CATALOG

FOREWORD

The American Indian tribal groups represented by the cylinder collections described in this catalog were located in the Northeast and in the woodlands around the western Great Lakes at the time of European contact. When they were recorded, however, some of these peoples no longer lived in these areas. At the time their songs and stories were collected, the Kickapoo and Sauk, originally in the territory of Wisconsin, were relocated in Oklahoma, as were the Shawnee from the Ohio Valley. The Fox, also earlier inhabitants of the Wisconsin woodlands, were settled on a reservation in Iowa. Some of the Winnebago people were in Wisconsin while others had been removed to Nebraska, and recordings were made at both locations.

Three of the principal North American linguistic stocks—Algonquian, Iroquoian, and Siouan—are represented in this catalog. The music and narratives of the seven Algonquian subgroups comprise by far its greatest portion. Iroquoian materials are found on only six cylinders, and the Siouan stock is represented only by the Winnebago collections.

Jesse Walter Fewkes's Passamaquoddy cylinders, recorded in 1890, are historically important, for they represent the first efforts to collect music for scientific analysis. Scarcely a year after Edison's invention became available commercially, Fewkes made an experimental field trip to the Passamaquoddy settlements in Maine to gain familiarity with the new equipment and to develop his own procedures for recording Indian speech and song. The trip was undertaken in preparation for the second Hemenway Expedition later that year, on which Fewkes was to record Zuni songs and narratives. His awareness of the importance of this new means of preserving sound is evident in his opening statement in "A Contribution to Passamaquoddy Folklore," published in the Journal of American Folk-lore within months of his trip:

> The study of aboriginal folk-lore cannot reach its highest scientific value until some method is adopted by means of which an accurate record of the stories can be obtained and preserved. . . . As a means of preserving the songs and tales of races which are fast becoming extinct, [the phonograph] is, I believe, destined to play an important part in future researches (p. 257).

Fewkes's publication based on the recordings can be considered one of the earliest in ethnomusicology. Even though it is devoted mostly to English versions of several of the stories he collected, the article also includes ethnographic data about traditional Passamaquoddy beliefs concerning music, descriptions of song contexts and musical instruments, a complete account of the choreography of the Snake Dance, three musical transcriptions by S.B. Cheney, song texts recovered and translated, and discussions of performance practices.

The state of the Fewkes Passamaquoddy collection reflects the age of the recordings and a history of being stored in various places over a long period of time. The sound quality of the cylinders is fair, but surface noise obscures some of the program and Fewkes's identifying announcements. A cross-check with Fewkes's list of recordings shows that over time some of the recordings were lost or discarded: only eighteen of the thirty-five listed can be positively correlated. Most of the narratives are incomplete because of the missing cylinders. Since the stories collected were all too long to be accommodated on single cylinders, Fewkes used several, numbering them consecutively. But for the story of the Fisher and the Sable, for example, we have only numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, and 8. Also missing are Fewkes's cylinders no. 5, "English words with Passamaquoddy translations," and no. 23, a dialogue between his two principal informants, Peter Selmore and Noel Josephs—the latter is called "Newell Joseph(s)" in Fewkes's recorded announcements.

The previous numbered page in the original document was blank

The collection poses problems in documentation fairly typical of those facing the Federal Cylinder Project. The Passamaquoddy material had been mixed in with some Zuni and Hopi cylinders recorded by Fewkes in 1890-91 and with miscellaneous lectures, sound tests, and demonstrations of the phonograph. When there are no announcements or when the recording is obscured by surface noise, the process of sorting out the collections is not always straightforward. The cavity of one cylinder contained a note identifying it as "Hopi," but the narrated description of the Snake Dance on the recording is repeated nearly verbatim in Fewkes's Passamaquoddy article, so clearly the Passamaquoddy rather than the Hopi Snake Dance is documented on the cylinder.

Two collectors in particular—the musicologist Frances Densmore (1867-1957) and the linguist Truman Michelson (1879-1938)—recorded extensively among the central Algonquians; Densmore focused early in her career on the Ojibwe (Chippewa), working later with the Menominee; Michelson concentrated on the Fox, Sauk, Absentee Shawnee, and Kickapoo. Since Densmore's interests were exclusively musical, she recorded no narratives, while the Michelson collection is almost equally divided between spoken and sung performances.

Densmore's recordings account for nearly three-fourths of the Northeast/Western Woodlands sample. Because she was one of the earliest and most prolific collectors of Indian music, she deserves special attention. Densmore came to the study of Indian music with thorough training in the art music of Western Europe, having taught piano, served as a church organist, lectured on Wagner, and authored an article on Mendelssohn's childhood. She first heard Indian singing as a child, coming from a Sioux camp near her lifelong home in Red Wing, Minnesota. In 1893, inspired by Alice C. Fletcher's fieldwork and published study of Omaha music, she added Fletcher's Indian material to her lecture topics, accompanying the melodies on the piano. Her earliest collecting was by ear—melodies from Sioux women near Red Wing in 1901, a song by Geronimo at the St. Louis Exposition, and her first Ojibwe example, a Grand Medicine song from Little Spruce in 1905 at Grand Portage, Minnesota.

Sensing the immediate need to preserve Indian songs before they vanished, Densmore wrote to the Bureau of American Ethnology (BAE) for assistance. In 1907 she began her career as a "collaborator" with the bureau, which continued to fund her fieldwork and publish the results in a series of bulletins over a forty-six-year period. With an initial $150 grant, Densmore purchased an Edison Home Phonograph and began to record singers from the White Earth and Leech Lake Ojibwe reservations in Minnesota. From the start, the BAE was clearly impressed with Densmore's mission. In the Administrative Report for 1907-8, bureau chief William H. Holmes announced that "During the year for the first time the study of native Indian music was seriously taken up by the Bureau" and concluded that Densmore's cylinder recordings from northern Minnesota were "of exceptional interest and scientific value" (29th Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology [1916]:19). Frederick W. Hodge, BAE ethnologist-in-chief, later estimated that the total of her Ojibwe recordings—nearly five hundred songs—provided "a safe basis for what might be termed a scientific study of primitive music" (Administrative Report, 31st Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology [1918]:20).

Densmore's first comprehensive study based on cylinder recordings was Chippewa Music (1910, 1913). The fact that it was published in two installments reflects her early research methods. As she collected, transcribed, and analyzed her material, she would turn in preliminary reports based on her findings. When a number of these had accrued, they would be submitted as a "paper" or "memoir" to the Smithsonian Institution, wherein the BAE was located, to be considered for publication as a bulletin. This accounts for the rather loosely structured format of Densmore's early studies. Although the chapters partially reflect the chronology of her collecting, her material is arranged by reservation and then by genre in an attempt to discern connections between the use of a song and its stylistic elements. This organization necessarily disregarded the order in which singers were recorded, as well as that of the songs they performed, but her purpose was scientific and such grouping was necessary for her to draw conclusions. Occasionally, however, she enlivened her text by reconstructing or simulating a natural context for songs; see, for example, the account of the rituals of the Grand Medicine initiation ceremony in which the songs were performed.

Densmore's transcriptions and stylistic analyses are dated by today's standards, influenced as they were by her bent towards programmatic interpretations based on late-nineteenth-century European music. Still, the monographs are useful in providing ethnographic information surrounding the musical practices of the tribes she studied. Wherever possible she included information culled from a variety of sources – reminiscences of her informants, her own photographs, scientific identifications of flora and fauna, and citations from published works such as William Warren's history of the Ojibwe. Her abiding interest in this particular tribe led ultimately to an expanded study of its ethnology, Chippewa Customs (1929), a work reprinted and still consulted as a standard reference on Ojibwe culture.

The proximity of Ojibwe reservations in Minnesota and Wisconsin to Densmore's home accounts for her earliest in-depth attention to their music. In 1910 she accompanied Lac du Flambeau Ojibwe people to a drum presentation ceremony at Neopit, Wisconsin, on the Menominee reservation. She learned from one of her Flambeau singers that some of the songs of the drum presentation repertoire were Sioux in origin. Her subsequent forays further north and west to collect songs from the Teton Sioux, Mandan, and Hidatsa were prompted in part by this information. Later she returned to the Neopit area to obtain songs of the Menominee. Red Wing was close to some of the Wisconsin Winnebago sites and on the route taken by Winnebagos traveling to or from Nebraska, so she recorded their songs on various occasions over several years, although her manuscript on Winnebago music was never published.

No less important than Densmore's contributions were those of Truman Michelson. Although Michelson specialized in comparative studies of central Algonquian languages, like Densmore he was absorbed in general ethnology and published frequently on a variety of topics. His principal focus was on the language and ceremonials of the Fox Indians, which accounts for his attention to collecting the spoken word as well as songs. Probably the earliest recordings of the language, the Fox cylinders containing material such as Bill Leaf's six minutes of "Kishko's words" and Alfred Kiyana's narration of a traditional story about the Fox culture hero Wisakea are valuable legacies.

One of Michelson's greatest achievements was to record more than one hundred songs of the Fox "Religion Dance" (= Drum Dance), an outgrowth of the Plains Grass Dance which spread to central Algonquian tribes in the late 1800s. Michelson's is the earliest large collection from this genre, although Densmore had sampled Meckawigabau's Ojibwe versions of some of these songs two years earlier at Lac du Flambeau, Wisconsin. The Drum Dance was common to the Ojibwe, Menominee, Potawatomie, Kickapoo, and others. Densmore's recordings of the Ojibwe in 1910 and the Menominee in the 1930s, Michelson's Fox material, and James Slotkin's tapes of Menominee songs in the early 1950s constitute a large corpus for a comparative study of the Algonquian Drum Dance repertoire and its oral transmission. However, Michelson only sampled the repertoire of the other Fox religious fraternities which predate the "Religion Dance" – for example, bundle songs from the White Buffalo Dance.

Another valuable contribution is the group of forty-five cylinder recordings by Joe Billy narrating sacred legends of the Absentee Shawnee; included are stories about the deity Pabothkwe (Cloud) and addresses by her grandson Abotchkilawetha (Rounded Side) to various other tribes sharing Oklahoma territory with the Shawnee – the Creek, Choctaw, Wichita, Caddo, Arapaho, Cheyenne, and Comanche. Joe Billy also commented on a variety of contemporaneous events and issues, such as land frauds, the influence of "white man's churches," and whiskey.

The other collectors listed in this catalog, having more diversified interests, contributed only small numbers of cylinders to this corpus. Samuel Barrett, possibly responsible for the recording of four Iroquoian cylinders, pursued his interests among the Ojibwe, Menominee, Hopi, and Californian tribes as well. Alice C. Fletcher's principal work was among the Omaha; recognizing Densmore's interest in Ojibwe music, she in fact donated her three 1899 Ojibwe cylinders—the oldest from that tribe—to Densmore. The twelve Ojibwe cylinders of Laura Miller Taylor appear to be her only contribution to ethnomusicology. But since she recorded Eniwube, one of Densmore's informants, performing several of his songs collected earlier by Densmore, this small collection is important in offering early material for comparative study. The Menominee cylinders recorded by the anthropologist Alanson Skinner are a useful complement to Densmore's, as they both contain songs of the mita'win, the Menominee version of the Ojibwe Grand Medicine Society. The collections are well documented in publications by the two authors.

The cylinder recordings of Winnebago singers made by Densmore, Fletcher, Paul Radin, and Huron Smith represent the only Siouan language portion of the corpus. Radin's and Densmore's collections have proven problematic in reconstruction and identification, and the accompanying documentation by the collectors should be treated with caution. Most of Radin's informants had converted from traditional religion to Christianity and peyotism by the time they performed for him; Densmore's unpublished manuscript based on her recordings is replete with errors. Still, the very size of these early samples invites a full study of Winnebago music including comparisons with contemporary repertoire.

The contents of this catalog reflect the course of American Indian research in the Northeast geographical quadrant between 1890 and the 1930s. Since most of the aboriginal New England and maritime Indians had disappeared or had been largely acculturated into Anglo-American society, the archeology of the region seemed a more appropriate focus than its ethnology. For example, apart from the narratives collected by J.N.B. Hewitt, Iroquoian ceremonial and musical studies were less actively undertaken on the whole prior to the 1930s than they would be during and after the 1940s by scholars such as William Fenton, Gertrude Kurath, H.C. Conklin, and William Sturtevant. Indian cultures in the western woodlands and beyond the Mississippi seemed more likely sources for study.

As the collectors represented in this catalog began to realize the possibilities of the new technology represented by the cylinder recorder, they hastened their efforts to preserve what remained of the older culture of the "vanishing American." Hence Frances Densmore constantly sought the oldest singers and repertoires. In recording songs from ninety-year-old Odjibwe, she perceived the opportunity to preserve for scientific analysis a corpus of war songs half a century removed from their original context.

These pioneers in the nascent discipline of "comparative musicology," later to be known as ethnomusicology, had few previous studies to guide them. Perforce they developed their own methodologies and classification systems, as well as spellings for languages where no standard orthographies existed. Having only Western standards by which to measure their research, they were often unable to judge the wider implications of their material. For instance, despite Ojibwe singers' frequent attribution of songs to the Dakota, Densmore never understood Siouan influences or distinguished stylistically between the older and newer Ojibwe repertoires. Consequently she was inconsistent, giving Ojibwe labels to Begging Dance and Woman's Dance songs, while isolating Meckawigabau's Drum Dance songs and assigning them a separate identification scheme, "S[ioux]" plus a number. Because we now know the pervasiveness of American Indian song borrowing, we can be less rigidly "scientific" or exclusionary in labeling the varied segments of Meckawigabau's personal repertoire, and accept, regardless of origin, any song regularly performed by an Indian singer as rightfully belonging to the total song literature of his or her tribe.

Much work is needed to improve our understanding of traditional Indian music and narrative in the Northeast. The cylinder collections described here invite further systematic research and assessment. When the older samples are brought into line with material recorded more recently in other media, we can begin to write musical histories of the peoples represented, albeit tentatively and only for relatively brief time spans. In addition, specific questions can be asked: Does the music of the Winnebago people as a whole reflect their two locations, on the plains as well as in the woodlands? What is the ultimate source of the Drum Dance melodies and can they be found on the northern Plains today where the Grass Dance has spread? How much Ojibwe music for the Grand Medicine Society was borrowed intact by their Menominee neighbors? What do the Michelson Shawnee narratives reveal about intertribal relations? Ultimately, we hope this catalog will benefit not only students and scholars of American Indian music and language who may engage in such research but also the descendants of the singers and narrators by enhancing perceptions of their tribal heritage.

INTRODUCTION

This catalog brings together sixteen collections of music and spoken word originating among Native American groups traditionally associated with the Northeastern woodlands. Some of the recordings were made in the traditional homelands; others come from reservations in Iowa, Oklahoma, and Nebraska. Among them are the earliest cylinder field-recordings—Passamaquoddy songs and narratives recorded by Jesse Walter Fewkes in March 1890. The collections provide the basis for a variety of comparative studies: Chippewa, Menominee, and Winnebago songs were each recorded by several people, in some cases from the same singers; certain song genres and rituals (for example, the Drum or Religion Dance) are represented in collections from several tribes. Sometimes these materials point beyond woodlands cultures; the Winnebago Peyote songs, for instance, were initially acquired from Plains people who were their neighbors in Nebraska.

Much of the material listed in the Northeast catalog was assembled by Frances Densmore among the Chippewa, Menominee, and Winnebago people of Minnesota and Wisconsin. When her first cylinders, the Chippewa collection, came to the Library, they were transferred to aluminum discs and later to magnetic tape in sequence, cylinder-by-cylinder. Densmore organized the transfer of her later collections, however, by individual songs rather than by whole cylinders. In the Menominee collection, for example, several songs originally recorded on a single cylinder were often separated, and are to be found as segments on two or three different discs. (In accordance with Densmore's directive to "discard," some songs were not transferred at all.) Since each entry in the Federal Cylinder Project catalogs represents one cylinder, which has been used as the basic organizing unit, two or more AFS numbers are necessary for most entries. To show the actual order of songs heard on the preservation tapes, concordances to the tapes have been provided for the Densmore Menominee and Winnebago collections; they follow the introductions to the respective catalog segments.

Three Northeast collections were initially attributed to Samuel Barrett at or after the time they were transferred to the Library of Congress along with Barrett's Hopi cylinder collection. Subsequently, the Winnebago cylinders were determined to be Huron Smith's, and some of the cylinders identified as "Iroquoian" were found to be Alanson Skinner's Menominee cylinders. Skinner may also have recorded the remaining Iroquoian materials, but until specific evidence is found, this collection continues to be attributed to Barrett.

While the format used in this catalog is generally the same as that which is described in the volume preface, some modifications will be seen. The category "Original No." is replaced in almost all collections by a different heading: "BAE No." for the Densmore recordings; "Collector No." for Michelson and Fletcher (these numbers may have been assigned by the collectors themselves or by a library or archive which accessioned cylinders according to collector rather than according to tribal group or geographical source; "Storage No." for the Fewkes collection. See the introductions to the various collections for specific information.

"Field No." refers to the number that Frances Densmore assigned to a cylinder or to each song on a cylinder during some (but not all) of her field trips, usually different from her final numbering sequence based on song analyses. Field numbers have been given a separate heading for collections with particularly complex and overlapping numbering schemes; otherwise they are found in the NOTES.

The NOTES for several collections contain textual clarifications and genre classifications supplied by contemporary American Indian and anthropological/ethnomusicological consultants. Also provided are record numbers for those songs in the Densmore collections which appear on Library of Congress LPs.

Certain abbreviations for consultants, institutions, and frequently cited publications appear throughout the catalog:

AA = American Anthropologist
BAE = Bureau of American Ethnology
HNAI = Handbook of North American Indians
JAF = Journal of American Folk-lore
NAA = National Anthropological Archives
NOL = Nancy Oestreich Lurie
TV = Thomas Vennum, Jr.

Other abbreviations will be noted in the introductions to specific collections.

BAE CATALOG NUMBERS: 1-449 [with gaps]

Three hundred and seventeen four-inch and twenty-one six-inch cylinders containing Chippewa songs recorded by Frances Densmore on one visit to Washington, D.C., and during ten field trips in Minnesota and Wisconsin between July 1907 and November 1910. Most of the cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948 and from the Smithsonian Institution in 1981. Cylinders 3,760-3,777 were gifts from Densmore to the Music Division of the Library of Congress in 1943 and 1944.

These songs, her first recordings, were given catalog numbers beginning with BAE 1. But Densmore subsequently changed her method of assigning BAE numbers, as she explained in a note accompanying cylinder 3,760:

> At the beginning of the work all recorded songs were given numbers, in consecutive order . . . This plan was discontinued about 1908 and only transcribed songs received numbers. The untranscribed songs previously numbered were not sent to the Bureau, the cylinders were generally scraped, and their numbers not included in the "catalog list." This accounts for "dropped numbers" in the catalog lists of early books.

Approximately seventy BAE numbers were "dropped" in this collection.

Densmore's descriptions and analyses of the songs are found in two monographs, Chippewa Music and Chippewa Music II (BAE Bulletins 45 and 53, cited hereafter as "I" and "II"), with supplemental information in Chippewa Customs (BAE Bulletin 86), in reports to the BAE, and in other articles.

Densmore noted that "Chippewa" was a "corrupted form" of the name of the tribe, "the only form which seems to have been used in Government publications" but "never adopted" by the people themselves (II:59, footnote 1). Because she nonetheless used the term in her own cataloging and publications, the collection is here labeled as "Chippewa" rather than "Ojibwa" (or variants—Ojibwe, Ojibway, etc.).

She recorded many singers, most of them in their reservation communities, but also De'bwawen'dunk in Washington, D.C.; Ga'gandac' at the Nicollet Hotel in Minneapolis; and Awun'akum'igickun, a Canadian Indian, at Ponemah, Minnesota. Her field notes use non-Indian names and less linguistically standardized spellings than are found in her monographs. The names of the singers are listed below (diacritics are limited here to the apostrophes marking stressed syllables). The English translations for Indian names that are found in Chippewa Music are not given unless they appear in Densmore's notes or are heard on the cylinder announcements. Also given are the home reservations of the singers; apart from Lac du Flambeau, which is in Wisconsin, the reservations are located in Minnesota.

Densmore recorded at two places on Red Lake, at the agency itself and across the lake at Wabacing village (also identified as the Cross Lake settlement). Wabacing is known today as Ponemah and will therefore be listed as "Wabacing/Ponemah (Red Lake)" in the Chippewa collection.

Densmore consulted two White Earth men named Main'ans (the elder is pictured in I, plates 3 and 6; the younger in I, plate 10, and II, plate 9) but recorded only Main'ans the younger. See her comments in the text and the index to Bulletin 45.

Several of Densmore's Leech Lake singers were among a delegation that visited Washington, D.C., in 1899. The photograph on page 749 of volume 15, Handbook of North American Indians, shows Gegwe'djiwe'binun (second from the right in the front row) and Ge'miwunac' (third from the left in the back row). Flat Mouth (second from the left in the front row) is probably the man whose last days and funeral Densmore described (see I:51-55 and plate 7).

The BAE catalog cards were the initial source of dates (almost always a generalized "1907-1909") and places (usually reservations rather than specific towns). This information was then modified on the basis of Densmore's travel reports in the Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections and her diaries and account book (National Anthropological Archives, ms. 4250). The modified dates are enclosed in brackets.

In Bulletin 45, Densmore sometimes provides only the text or melodic contour of a song, rather than a full transcription. Page numbers for the full transcriptions are given in the NOTES. Performer numbers, often found on the cylinder box labels and lids or heard on the announcements, are listed in the PERFORMER entry. Numbers in parentheses are documented; those in brackets are based on context rather than specific evidence. The first entry for each performer will also include bracketed name variants and spellings. Densmore usually blew her pitchpipe after announcements to provide a reference pitch; instances when she did so are indicated in the NOTES.

Densmore sometimes provided song titles which are in effect genres (for example, Love song, Moccasin Game song), and occasionally a title such as "Repetition of # . . ." or "Duplicate of # . . . ." The numbers in those titles can be BAE numbers, serial (= transcription) numbers, or both; the indices to her monographs provide the necessary cross-references. On the catalog cards, Densmore included the notation "no words" in the titles of some songs; this indication also serves as a "song title" in some of her indices.

Unless genres are stated explicitly in the song titles, the genre designation found on the BAE catalog cards will usually be found in brackets in the DESCRIPTION section. An exception is made for those songs which Densmore lumped into the "Unclassified" category. That "classification" will be found at the beginning of the NOTES. Corrections or additional comments on song genres which were provided by Thomas Vennum, Jr. (TV), are also included in the NOTES. One of the striking genres in the collection, Mide songs are often preceded and followed by characteristic vocables. Some singers, such as O'deni'gun, precede Mide songs with speech accompanied by drumming.

Other initials appearing in the notes include "WCCO"—the call letters for a Minneapolis radio station at which Densmore gave several talks about Indian music and on whose premises she duplicated some cylinders. In 1935 Dr. Harold Seashore of the University of Iowa had disc copies made of some of Densmore's cylinders; "SDS" plus a number was used to identify those discs. For example, see cylinder 3,765.

Some material from this collection was used for the record album Songs of the Chippewa (Library of Congress, AFS L22), edited by Densmore and released in 1950. These songs will be indicated in the NOTES section by [L22] plus the side and band number. The song title on the album is shown only where it differs from the title given in the monographs.

Because of their special status in Densmore's cataloging system, nineteen additional cylinders, containing music from the ceremonial Drum Dance, are introduced separately on page 129, as "Sioux songs of the Drum Presentation ceremony."

LOCATION White Earth, Minnesota

NOTES Surface noise. [ANNOUNCEMENT at 2:42]: "#202 . . . William Walters #1." Reference pitch. The last speech includes the word "nagamon" [song]. [LABEL]: "This is probably the oldest cylinder in [this] group. At the beginning of the work all recorded songs were given numbers, in consecutive order. This is 202. Several others in this group have higher numbers. This plan was discontinued about 1908 and only transcribed songs received numbers. The untranscribed songs previously numbered were not sent to the Bureau, the cylinders were generally scraped, and their numbers not included in the 'catalog list.' This accounts for 'dropped numbers' in the catalog lists of early books." [TV]: Probably a war dance song.

DESCRIPTION	[Unidentified song; probably an honoring song]
PERFORMER	Main'ans (4)
LOCATION	White Earth, Minnesota
DATE	[January 1909]

NOTES	Garbled sound ca. 0:50. Surface noise. The recording engineer dubbed this cylinder twice; the sound is clearer on the second take, and drumming is audible. [ANNOUNCEMENT at the beginning]: "Main'ans #4." Reference pitch. [LABEL]: "SDS 10. Copied WCCO." ("SDS" numbers were assigned to copies of cylinder material given by Densmore to Harold Seashore at the University of Iowa for testing purposes. According to her notes of the SDS recordings, this is the honoring song Main'ans sang in January 1909 during which he inserted her Indian name--"Gicigokwe" [sky-woman]. She kept the cylinder as a personal souvenir for many years.) [TV]: Perhaps originally a dream song used for a war dance, or a doctoring song.

PERFORMER	John Carl (2); (3)
LOCATION	Mahnomen, Minnesota
DATE	January 8, 1909
NOTES	Six-inch cylinder. False start by engineer. Drumming audible at 0:34, but the sound fades before singing begins. 35-second pause between 2) and the time 3) becomes audible. Break in the sound of 3) between 4:42 and 4:55. [ANNOUNCEMENT at the beginning]: "Songs are #2, Cawunoga." [LABEL]: "Songs 2 and 3 recorded by John Carl. The note-book herewith submitted shows the field entry of these songs, the words of the first being given in Chippewa and translated as follows--'From the south, dance toward me, cover my head.' This is a dance of the Cawunoga, or Southern Dance, in which each dancer had a blanket over his or her head, so the men could not be distinguished from the women. At a certain time in the dance one dancer danced in front of another with head forward, holding out the blanket. The other 'rises' and they dance toward the south under the same blanket (cf. Bull. 53, pp. 234-236.) The second is a moccasin game song, with no words. Record has loud drum but interesting vibrato. Concerning John Carl, cf. Bull. 53, pp. 302, 303." [SECOND LABEL]: "An entry in my diary states that John Carl recorded these songs at his home in Mahnomen, on the White Earth reservation, on January 8, 1909. Carl was a fine interpreter and assisted chiefly in that capacity, both on the reservation and in Washington where he accompanied the chief."

SIOUX SONGS OF THE DRUM PRESENTATION CEREMONY

PERFORMER: Mec'kawiga'bau

LOCATION: Lac du Flambeau, Wisconsin

DATE: October-November 1910

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 3,625-3,637; 3,926-3,931

AFS NUMBERS: 10,555-10,556; 21,261-21,262

BAE NUMBERS: S. 1 to S. 20

Nineteen four-inch cylinders recorded by Frances Densmore in October and November 1910, at Lac du Flambeau, Wisconsin. Thirteen cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948 and six from the Smithsonian Institution in 1979. They contain songs belonging to the repertoire of the Drum Dance. Densmore had just witnessed this ceremony at Neopit, Wisconsin, when Lac du Flambeau Chippewas presented a ceremonial drum to the Menominee Indians.

According to the 32nd Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology (1910-1911), "songs of the ceremony were recorded by Miss Densmore on a phonograph after the return of the drum party to Lac du Flambeau. Many of the songs are of Sioux origin, as the ceremony was adopted from that people; consequently the songs were analyzed separately from those of Chippewa origin. . . . The Sioux songs of the Drum-presentation ceremony . . . constitute the beginning of an analytical study of the Sioux music . . ." (page 28).

The BAE catalog cards identify these songs as "Siouan" (and the recording engineer for the later batch of cylinders announces them as "Sioux"), though the transcriptions and analyses are included in Chippewa Music II. Densmore set them apart from the other songs by assigning them a separate numerical sequence, S. ("Sioux") 1 to S. 20. The collection thus represents a system of cataloging which combines immediate provenance (her singer was a Chippewa) and ultimate source (the songs were attributed to the Sioux).

The Drum Dance was transferred to several Central Algonquian groups. The Religion Dance songs which Michelson recorded in 1912 are from the Fox variant of this ceremony and may usefully be compared with songs in this collection. See also the Drum Religion songs which Densmore recorded among the Menominee around 1925.

COLLECTOR NUMBERS: Fletcher [Fl.] 7, 8, 198

Three four-inch cylinders recorded by Alice Cunningham Fletcher in Washington, D.C., on January 24, 1899. Fletcher recorded examples of Woman's Dance, Moccasin Game, Mide, war, love, and "Meeting" (Drum Dance?) songs from Swift Flying Feather (Gay-zhe-gwun-e-osh), a member of the Leech Lake (Minnesota) delegation brought to the capital by Rev. Joseph A. Gilfillan of White Earth, Minnesota. Fletcher gave these cylinders to Frances Densmore at some later time, probably after Densmore published her own work on Chippewa music in 1910. Through Densmore, the cylinders were deposited in the National Archives, from which they were transferred to the Library of Congress in 1948.

An index to BAE cylinders supplied one song title which was not found on the catalog cards (see the notes for cylinder 850).

Thomas Vennum, Jr. (indicated in the NOTES section by "TV") provided the identification of the HNAI photo and of some song genres. In an article on the Fletcher Chippewa cylinders, Vennum notes that Gilfillan's novel, The Ojibway (New York and Washington: Neale Publishing Company, 1904), contains transcriptions of five melodies from the first two Fletcher cylinders with a harmonized accompaniment by Edwin S. Tracy.

THE LAURA MILLER TAYLOR COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Laura Miller Taylor

PERFORMER: Eniwube (and others?)

LOCATION: Lac du Flambeau, Wisconsin

DATE: Summer 1915 [and 1916?]

PROVENANCE: The Detroit Public Library
5201 Woodward Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48202

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 3,965-3,975; 4,213

AFS NUMBER: 22,168

COLLECTOR'S NUMBERS: 1-5, 8-10, 12-15

Twelve cylinders of Chippewa music among those collected by Laura and Ralph B. Miller (her first husband) of St. Louis, Missouri, probably in the course of their 1915 canoe trip between Lac du Flambeau, Wisconsin, and Duluth, Minnesota, with stops at the Wisconsin Chippewa reservations. Additional information and perhaps recordings were obtained during the summer of 1916 at Lac du Flambeau. The cylinders were transferred from the Detroit Public Library in 1954.

An Ashland (Wisconsin) newspaper noted that the Millers' tour was for the purposes of "studying Indian costumes" and for "securing Indian songs for publication" (Odanah Star, August 6, 1915, page 1). Mrs. Miller seemed especially interested in replicating some of Frances Densmore's work with Eniwube at Lac du Flambeau. But the couple's only published article, "The Waters of Gitche Gumee" (Outing, May 1916:118-29), is a travelogue-style account of their canoe trip, with few ethnographic notes about the Chippewa and no references to their music.

Apparently the Millers did not supervise these recordings. In a letter of August 10 from Odanah, Mrs. Miller noted their relief on finally hearing that "our records . . . had reached Flambeau [an earlier stop in their tour]. The son of the chieftain was trying to see that we got the best possible songs." On her return to Flambeau in 1916, she was visited by Joe Kobe (Meckawigabau), another of Densmore's singers; on July 27, he listened to the recordings and identified genres and performers for her: "K[obe] says better one is squaw dance, without words. Guesses it was sung by Odanah Indian . . . other one he says is by Eniwube—it is war dance. Words at beginning say so." A list of songs dated July 16 may also describe the collection.

Laura Miller Taylor's papers are in the Burton Historical Collection at the Detroit Public Library. Her fieldnotes indicate an interest in Frances Densmore's work, in meeting Densmore's singers, and in recording some of the same songs: a note labeled "Eniwube's songs to get" is followed by titles and page numbers from Densmore's Chippewa Music II. While Miller Taylor apparently did not "get" those particular songs, some of her recordings are the same as, or similar to, songs in Densmore's collection. These are indicated in the NOTES by title, BAE number, and the page number of the transcription in Densmore's monograph. It is possible that all of Miller Taylor's cylinders were recorded by Eniwube; those for which origin is less certain have question marks.

The genre classifications in the DESCRIPTION section were provided by Thomas Vennum, Jr. His additional comments follow the designation "TV" in the NOTES.

Fifty-eight six-inch dictaphone cylinders and five four-inch cylinders recorded by Truman Michelson in July 1912, and perhaps on other BAE-sponsored field trips to the Fox (Mesquakie) community at Tama, Iowa. Approximately two-thirds of the cylinders contain songs of the Religion Dance (the Central Algonquian rite known elsewhere as the Drum or Dream Dance). Most of the cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948; an additional cylinder was transferred from the Smithsonian Institution in 1981.

Michelson published materials on the Fox in anthropological journals and in a series of BAE bulletins and an annual report. In the course of transcribing accounts of ceremonies, particularly those related to sacred bundles, Michelson included many song texts. Apart from a reference to the White Buffalo Dance recordings by Alfred Kiyana (40th Annual Report [1925]:28, footnote 5), however, cylinder materials are not specifically cited.

Although Michelson's manuscripts in the National Anthropological Archives (NAA) contain extensive notes both in English and in the Fox syllabary concerning the Religion Dance, he published little concerning the rites. His study of Fox mortuary practices includes a short segment on the Religion Dance (40th Annual Report [1925]:464-71), and he published a photograph of one of the Religion Dance drums in Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections 70, no. 2 (1919):121.

Michelson's primary singers were Alfred Kiyana, Bill Leaf, and Jim Mamasaw. Kiyana's recordings of narratives and songs of traditional rituals have been tentatively dated 1916, at a time when he and Michelson were doing much work together. Bill Leaf, identified as "No ka wa ta" (BAE Bulletin 114 [1937]:93), was a member of the War Chiefs gens who had at various times been "more or less orthodox Christian," a member of the Religion Dance, and a peyotist (ibid.:15). At least some of Leaf's recordings were made during July 1912, when Michelson collected all of the songs of one Religion Dance drum plus some songs from a second drum (Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections 60, no. 30 [1913]:34). He also sang for Martha Huot (Randle) in 1928; those recordings are in the Archives of Traditional Music, Indiana University. Jim Mamasaw's recordings were also made in 1912. Mamasaw was prominent in the Religion Dance, being one of the "Managers" in McIntosh's (also spelled "MacIntosh") drum (NAA ms. 2583, page 7).

Other singers included Fred Brown, one of those who sat at the east leg of the drum (NAA ms. 2583). "Papaku," a name which appears on the typed cylinder box labels, seems to be a misreading of Michelson's handwriting for "Papakie," another person listed among Religion Dance participants. For Brown and Papakie's Religion Dance recordings, Michelson used an alphabetic labeling sequence which is cited in the NOTES. Sam Peters was a "peyote devotee" (BAE Bulletin 105 [1931]:16); Michelson used him as a source concerning traditional ceremonies but added the caveat that Peters had not taken part in those rituals for several years (BAE Bulletin 87 [1928]:1).

Many of the cylinder labels do not indicate the name of the performer. In some cases tentative attributions have been made on the basis of vocal quality and recording characteristics. For example, cylinder 1,429 was definitely recorded by Jim Mamasaw. On it, the higher pitches resonate to the point of distortion, and Mamasaw closes the songs with a certain style of whoop. Many of the other Religion Dance recordings have the same sound (listed as "resonant distortion" in the NOTES section) and style. These cylinders are therefore attributed to Mamasaw. Bill Leaf also has a striking vocal quality which was recognizable on some of the unascribed cylinders.

The notes enclosed in the cylinder boxes often include Michelson's "timings" of recorded material—numbers from a gauge mounted on the dictaphone machine which marked the distance traveled left to right by the recording needle. Michelson customarily wrote down the starting and ending gauge numbers for each cut on the "roll" (cylinder). The notes do not always match the programs found on the respective cylinders, but those which do coincide suggest that Michelson recorded on at least two occasions, using two different machines or speeds—one in which a gauge unit lasts about 5.8 seconds, the other in which the unit is about 7.5 seconds. The Mamasaw and Papakie-Brown Religion Dance cylinders have the former unit; cylinders recorded by Leaf and Kiyana have the latter. Specific gauge numbers have not been listed for this collection in most cases, but they are available in the Archive of Folk Culture notes.

Michelson recorded narratives or story-songs concerning Wisakea (the culture hero), Wapasaiye (White Robe, a semi-historical figure), Turtle, and Opossum. He also recorded the following types of Fox songs:

- Buffalo Dance song
- Peyote songs
- Religion Dance songs
  - Belt song
  - Common songs
  - Drum song
  - Girls' and women's song
  - Head drummer's song
  - Head dryer of the drum's song
  - House keeper's song
  - Keeper of the drum's song
  - Ketcita (headmen) songs
  - Pananikwe songs
  - Pipe song
  - Warrior dance
  - Younger chiefs' songs
- Sacred bundle song
- Wazhazhe (Osage) song
- White Buffalo Dance song and speech

Where the subclassification of the Religion Dance genre is definitely determined, it appears first in the DESCRIPTION; otherwise the general heading comes first and the probable or possible subcategory follows, enclosed in brackets. Almost all of the Religion Dance songs end with characteristic whoops.

The DESCRIPTION and NOTES contain identifications found on the collection's catalog cards; consequently, there may be slightly different wordings than are supplied by the recording engineer who was reading the cylinder box labels.

DESCRIPTION 1) Third ketcita song [Religion Dance].
2) [1:41] Fourth ketcita song [Religion Dance].
3) [3:09] Fifth ketcita song [Religion Dance].
PERFORMER [Probably Jim Mamasaw or Bill Leaf]
DATE [July 1912]

NOTES [LABEL]: "McIntosh's drum--ketcita head singer's song, and other ketcita songs. Box No. 18." [ENCLOSED NOTE]: "Roll 18." Michelson identifies the songs, noting that they are sung by the "head singers," "second singers," and "3 singers," respectively.

CYLINDER NO. 1,424 TIME 5:29
AFS NO. 20,509: 4 QUALITY vg
COLLECTOR NO. 18-T.M.

IROQUOIS INDIAN SPOKEN WORD

THE SAMUEL A. BARRETT COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Samuel A. Barrett? (1879-1965)

PERFORMER: Unknown

LOCATION: Western New York state or Ontario

DATE: Autumn 1918 or spring 1919?

SPONSOR: Milwaukee Public Museum?

PROVENANCE: Milwaukee Public Museum
800 W. Wells
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53233

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 6,796-6,799

AFS NUMBER: 8906: A1-A3

Four four-inch cylinders, one of which was broken and could not be duplicated. The cylinders containing Iroquoian ceremonial speech were received by exchange from the Milwaukee Public Museum in 1947 and were attributed to Samuel A. Barrett along with the other cylinders in the Milwaukee collection. It is possible that they were recorded by Alanson Skinner. The recording date and location are uncertain.

As curator of anthropology at the Milwaukee Museum, Barrett visited western New York in the fall of 1918 to collect materials for an exhibit on the League of the Iroquois which the museum mounted in 1919 (see Lee Parsons, "A Fiji-Iroquois War Club," Expedition 4/1 [1961]:12-13). If he was the collector, this may have been the occasion for making these recordings, but there is no conclusive evidence at this time. Alanson Skinner was on an archeological dig in the western part of the state in late spring the following year. Some of the other "Barrett" cylinders, initially cataloged as Iroquoian (Menominee, in fact), were actually recorded by Skinner in June 1919. Possibly these four cylinders are Skinner's as well.

The cylinders pertain to the "Deyogo hedagwa, a speech among the Senecas and Cayugas." Horatio Hale, editor of The Iroquois Book of Rites (1883), described a "preliminary ceremony" called the "Deyughnyonkwarakda" ("at the edge of the woods"), prior to the Condoling and Chief-raising rites of the League. A fire was kindled, the pipe lit and passed around with formality, and the principal chief of the host group made a welcoming speech (Hale, p. 49). Deyogo hedagwa (appearing also as deyaga hedigwa and dayaga hedagiva on a catalog list) is not an immediately recognizable Iroquoian term and may well be a misspelling, but Morrie Abrams (Seneca from Cattaraugus reservation, New York) and Pauline Sky (Cayuga from Six Nations Reserve, Ontario) have identified the Seneca speech on these cylinders as part of the Chief-raising rite. They observed that the last item in the Densmore Iroquois collection, labeled "Welcoming Chant," is similar.

MEXICAN KICKAPOO INDIAN MUSIC

THE TRUMAN MICHELSON COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Truman Michelson (1879-1938)

PERFORMER: Joe Murdock

LOCATION: Oklahoma

DATE: Early 1910s

SPONSOR: Bureau of American Ethnology

PROVENANCE: National Archives
7th and Pennsylvania Avenues, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 1,469-1,470

AFS NUMBER: 20,513

COLLECTOR'S NUMBERS: 62-63 T.M.

Two six-inch dictaphone cylinders recorded by Truman Michelson on one of his trips to the area around Shawnee or McLoud, Oklahoma. The notes do not indicate when the recordings were made, but since some of Michelson's other recordings are dated 1911 or 1912 (see his Shawnee and Fox music collections), the early 1910s seem likely. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

The singer, Joe Murdock (spelled "Murdoch" in some of Michelson's notes), was a "Mexican Kickapoo of Oklahoma" who assisted Michelson as interpreter and informant; his name is given in Michelson's introduction to William Jones's Kickapoo Tales (1915) and in fieldnotes from 1929-30 (for example, National Anthropological Archives mss. 1335 and 1772).

The Mexican Kickapoo of Oklahoma had settled in northern Mexico after 1850 and returned to the Oklahoma Indian Territory around 1875. They are thus distinguished from the Kickapoos who never left the United States and from those who remained in Mexico. The present-day Kickapoos in Mexico and in Oklahoma maintain close ties, visiting each other particularly for ceremonial obligations. In ethnographic literature, they have frequently been cited for their conservatism, having retained many elements of Central Algonquian culture despite their separation in time and space from the Woodlands.

The only notes attached to Michelson's Kickapoo cylinders are untranslated syllabary texts. The genres represented on these recordings are therefore unknown.

MENOMINEE INDIAN MUSIC

THE ALANSON SKINNER COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Alanson Buck Skinner (1886-1925)

PERFORMERS: John San Baptiste [Sabatis] Perote (ca. 1840-1920), Captain John V. Satterlee

LOCATION: Near Keshena, Wisconsin

DATE: June 1919

SPONSOR: [Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation]

PROVENANCE: Milwaukee Public Museum
800 W. Wells
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53233

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 6,801-6,822

AFS NUMBERS: 8,906, 8,905, and 8,904

Twenty-two four-inch cylinders of Menominee Indian music recorded by Alanson Buck Skinner in June 1919 near Keshena, Wisconsin. The cylinders, primarily containing songs of the Medicine Ceremony (Mita'win), were received by exchange from the Milwaukee Public Museum in 1947.

Skinner published texts and commentary on these songs in "Songs of the Menomini Medicine Ceremony," American Anthropologist n.s. 27 (1925):290-314. The circumstances under which Skinner obtained this material were recounted in a brief biography of Judge John Perote in "Recollections of an Ethnologist among the Menomini Indians," Wisconsin Archeologist, o.s. 20, no. 2 (1921):41-75; additional material is found in "Medicine Ceremony of the Menomini, Iowa, and Wahpeton Dakota," Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, Indian Notes and Monographs 4 (1920):1-189.

Perote, a judge at the U.S. Indian Court in Keshena, was a leader of the Mita'win and of other ritual groups. He adopted Skinner as a nephew in order to convey the songs and information properly. Skinner also took precautions to conceal his source while Perote was alive.

According to the American Anthropologist article, the recordings were given to the Heye Foundation; but these cylinders came to the Library of Congress among a set of recordings by Samuel A. Barrett, Skinner's predecessor as curator of anthropology at the Milwaukee Public Museum. Barrett's work earlier in the 1910s included accounts of Menominee rites, and he and Skinner had collaborated on the exploration of mounds in the Menominee vicinity during the early summer of 1919 (a joint project of the Milwaukee Museum and the Heye Foundation). It is unclear whether these cylinders are the originals or a set of copies that came to Milwaukee because of Barrett's and Skinner's shared interests.

Labels on the cylinder box lids provide titles and numerical sequence. The cylinders are numbered consecutively from 5 through 25 (plus 25W—see cylinder 6,822), as part of a set of Iroquoian cylinders. (Only the four cylinders numbered 1 to 4 are actually Iroquoian; see the Barrett Iroquois collection.) The handwriting on the labels is not the same as the handwriting which is presumably Skinner's, encircling the top of the cylinder boxes. In some cases the labels represent a misreading of the collector's script: "snake comrade" on cylinder box 6,810 becomes "make courage" on the label. The first item in the DESCRIPTION section, therefore, is the caption around the top of the box, a more precise identification than is found on the label.

Besides Medicine Ceremony songs, Skinner also recorded love songs, gambling songs (several by his translator, Capt. John V. Satterlee, who also worked in later years for Frances Densmore), and two warrior songs. As Skinner notes, many of the songs have Ojibwa texts. Most of the Mita'win songs end with the vocables "we ho ho ho," whereas the Moccasin Game and warrior songs often end with whoops.

In the process of transferring this collection from cylinders to discs to preservation tapes, the order in which Skinner placed the cylinders has been disturbed. The discs were recorded out of sequence. Therefore, in order to follow the collection order, the listener must hear disc 8,906, then 8,905, then 8,904 (see the AFS numbers of the individual cylinders).

DESCRIPTION	Part 34--Dancing songs. 1) Dancing song. 2) [:47] Dancing song. 3) [1:18] Dancing song.
PERFORMER	San Baptiste Perote
NOTES	AA: 304. As the text indicates, the third song is "Panther's tail." [ANNOUNCEMENT at the beginning]: "Three dancing songs, record #34."

CYLINDER NO.	6,819	TIME	2:57
AFS NO.	8905: B4	QUALITY	good
DESCRIPTION	Part 36--A warrior song. 1) [Probably a warrior song]. 2) [1:58] Warrior song.
PERFORMER	San Baptiste Perote and John V. Satterlee
NOTES	The first song is sung by one person, the second song by two; both songs have rattle accompaniment. [ANNOUNCEMENT at 1:55]: "Another nanawe'tau nitamin." For "Nanawe'tau nitamin" [warrior song], see #44 and preceding comments, AA: 305. Skinner apparently re-numbered his "non-medicine songs," since #36 in his article is a love song, not a warrior song.

CYLINDER NO.	6,820	TIME
AFS NO.	Unassigned	QUALITY
DESCRIPTION	Flute song. Love song.
PERFORMER	San Baptiste Perote
NOTES	Cylinder broken; not dubbed. Possibly #37, AA: 305.

CYLINDER NO. 6,821 TIME 3:20
AFS NO. 8905: B5 QUALITY good

DESCRIPTION "Love songs 2 - 2 verses moccasin gambling song."
1) Flute love song.
2) [1:49] Moccasin Game song.
3) [2:23--Moccasin Game song].

PERFORMER San Baptiste Perote, John V. Satterlee

NOTES The first song is #36, AA: 304. The Moccasin Game songs are sung by a different singer, and use rattle accompaniment. Announcements at the beginning and at 1:47 identify the first two songs; the announcement for the third song, at 2:20, is mostly inaudible. The label's reference to "2 verses" is unclear; does it apply to the love song or to the two game songs?

CYLINDER NO. 6,822 TIME 3:02
AFS NO. 8904: A1 QUALITY fair

DESCRIPTION 1) [Unidentified song].
2) [:27--Unidentified song].
3) [:51--Unidentified song].
4) [1:10] Warrior song.

PERFORMER John V. Satterlee and San Baptiste Perote

NOTES See AA: 305. [ANNOUNCEMENT at 1:04]: "Warrior song sung by Judge San Baptiste Perote." The last song is accompanied by a rattle. The first two songs were sung by a different person, presumably Satterlee.
No specific title is given for this cylinder; the "W. 25" on the label ("25W" on a list of cylinders from the Milwaukee Museum) may not have been Skinner's designation.

PASSAMAQUODDY INDIAN MUSIC AND SPOKEN WORD

THE JESSE WALTER FEWKES COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Jesse Walter Fewkes (1850-1930)

PERFORMERS: Peter Selmore, Noel Josephs, J. Walter Fewkes

LOCATION: Calais, Maine; Boston?

DATES: March 1890; early 1891?

SPONSOR: Mary Hemenway

PROVENANCE: Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology
Harvard University
11 Divinity Avenue
Cambridge, Mass. 02138

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 4,232-4,262

AFS NUMBERS: 14,737-14,739

Thirty-one four-inch cylinders of Passamaquoddy Indian music and spoken word recorded by Jesse Walter Fewkes in March 1890 in Calais, Maine. The cylinders were received by exchange from the Peabody Museum in 1970.

These are the earliest known field-recorded cylinders of Native American song and narrative, collected by Fewkes primarily as a test in preparation for his work with the Second Hemenway Expedition to the southwestern pueblos beginning in the summer of 1890. The trip to Maine was a learning experience as well as a time to practice using the equipment intended for the expedition; Fewkes's letter to Mary Hemenway, dated March 16, 1890, expressed his astonishment at the extensive mythology of the Passamaquoddy Indians (quoted in Edwin L. Wade and Lea S. McChesney, America's Great Lost Expedition, Heard Museum, 1980, p. 8).

Fewkes's fieldnotes are in a notebook at the National Anthropological Archives (ms. 4408: 9). References to these notes are indicated by page numbers following "Ms" in the NOTES section. Fewkes published a report on his recordings in the Journal of American Folk-lore 3, no. 11 (1890):257-80. References to "A Contribution to Passamaquoddy Folk-lore" are indicated by page numbers following "JAF." He lectured about his trip to Maine and about the significance of the Edison phonograph; a portion of one of these lectures is found on cylinder 4,251. He also demonstrated the wonders of "Mr. Phonograph" to a visiting Passamaquoddy about a year after the trip to Maine (see cylinders 4,232 and 4,247).

Apart from the lecture and demonstration material, this collection includes several Passamaquoddy narratives, vocabulary and number lists, descriptions of the Snake Dance, a war song, and a trading song. David A. Francis, a Passamaquoddy from the Pleasant Point reservation near Eastport, Maine, listened to and translated the audible portions of the cylinders in 1983, thus clarifying and confirming their contents.

When transferred to the Library of Congress, the Passamaquoddy cylinders were not in any particular order and were interspersed with Fewkes's Hopi, Zuni, and miscellaneous recordings. The various narratives are scattered through the collection and are not always complete. The following list specifies the portions of the stories which have been identified and the cylinders on which they are found:

Story of the Fisher and the Sable
  #1—4238, #2—4245, #3—4261,
  #4— 4233, #8—4252
Story of the Medicine Man
  #2—4234, #3—4255
Story of the Swamp Woman
  #1—4237, #2—4250
Glooscap and the Animals
  #2—4262, #3—4241
Story of the Raccoon
  #1—4242, #2—4246

Leux and the Three Fires
#1 – 4253, #2 – 4244

Descriptions of the Snake Dance and its songs are found on cylinders 4235, 4236, 4251, 4256.

On the preservation tapes, the recording engineer identifies the cylinders by their position in the storage boxes transferred from the Peabody Museum ("STORAGE NO." in the catalog).

SAUK INDIAN MUSIC AND SPOKEN WORD

THE TRUMAN MICHELSON COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Truman Michelson (1879-1938)

PERFORMER: Leo Walker

LOCATION: Oklahoma

DATE: Early 1910s

SPONSOR: Bureau of American Ethnology

PROVENANCE: National Archives
7th and Pennsylvania Avenues, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 1,467-1,468

AFS NUMBER: 20,513

COLLECTOR'S NUMBERS: 60-61 T.M.

Two six-inch dictaphone cylinders recorded by Truman Michelson on one of his trips in the early 1910s to the area around Shawnee and McLoud, Oklahoma, where he gathered information on the local Algonquian peoples. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948. They contain a love song, drunk songs, squaw songs, and a speech in the manner of an "old timer."

The 33rd Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, 1911-1912 (1919):24 describes the beginning of his research among the Sauk and notes Michelson's use of Sauk assistance in translating Fox and Kickapoo materials. Leo Walker, "a Sauk of Oklahoma," is specifically mentioned as an interpreter in Michelson's 1915 introduction to William Jones's KickapooTales; he may have assisted the ethnologist from 1911 on. A photo of Walker is found in Michelson's report, "Algonquian Indian Tribes of Oklahoma and Iowa," Explorations and Field-work of the Smithsonian Institution in 1928 (1929):186.

6) [3:43] Trial.
7) [4:19] Trial.
8) [4:52] Drunk song.
9) [5:32] Variation of the same.

NOTES

The first song is interrupted in the middle. Sound breaks up during 3). Enclosed timings, syllabary song texts, and English translations for "Sauk roll 1": 1) "I want you to take me away. I don't what [sic] will happen to me. This man I'm living with will never do the right thing by me. That's the reason why I want you to take me away." 2) "I am coming, my friend, will merely to listen to what you will have said to me, that's the reason why I've come, my friend." 3) "Don't cry, my sister-in-law; I will give this ring, I will give (if you quit crying); don't cry, my sister-in-law." 4) "Give me tobacco. It will be like you are worshiping the Great Spirit if you hand me the tobacco." 8) and 9) "Quit saying something about me, my friends; you will never ruin my reputation by talking about me. That's the reason why I told you about it."

ABSENTEE SHAWNEE INDIAN SPOKEN WORD

THE TRUMAN MICHELSON COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Truman Michelson (1879-1938)

PERFORMER: Joe Billy

LOCATION: Oklahoma

DATE: Fall 1911

SPONSOR: Bureau of American Ethnology

PROVENANCE: National Archives
7th and Pennsylvania Avenues, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 1,471-1,516

AFS NUMBERS: 20,513-20,519

COLLECTOR'S NUMBERS: 64-109 T.M.

Forty-six six-inch dictaphone cylinders recorded in Oklahoma by Truman Michelson in the fall of 1911, near the beginning of his work on Algonquian languages. The cylinders, all of which contain Absentee Shawnee narratives, were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

The 33rd Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology (1911-1912) notes that Michelson went to Oklahoma in mid-August 1911 to do work among the Sauk. "He also gathered some Shawnee myths, partly in text, partly on the phonograph" (p. 24).

The Absentee Shawnee are one of three independent Shawnee groups. Originating as the "peace faction" during the American Revolution, they moved out of Ohio to Missouri, then into Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas; by 1867 they had settled on the Canadian River in central Oklahoma (HNAI 15:632). The Shawnee people as a whole had been divided into five patrilineal descent groups, each with specific powers and responsibilities. The Absentee Shawnee include three of the five divisions: the Kishpoko, Pekowi, and Thawikila, responsible for war, tribal ritual, and political affairs respectively (HNAI 15:624). Among the Michelson cylinders are speeches to the "Kishpogos" (cylinders 1,506-1,508) and to the "Kila" (i.e., Thawikila; cylinders 1,503-1,505).

Joe Billy was half Shawnee and half Creek, a "dance leader and messenger man" in the Kishpoko division of the Absentee Shawnee (Erminie Voegelin, "Shawnee Musical Instruments," American Anthropologist 44 [1942]:467). In addition to autobiographical material (cylinder 1,472) and topical comments (e.g., concerning land frauds, peyotism, and whiskey), Billy recorded narratives concerning Shawnee deities:

Pabothkwe ("Our Grandmother"/the Creator)
Abotchkilawetha (the Creator's grandson)
Matchi manitou
Nashithegi

Abotchkilawetha directly addresses the Shawnee divisions named above, as well as neighboring Indian peoples.

Michelson numbered these cylinders sequentially; the "Box No." labels which he assigned appear in the NOTES section. Enclosed in each cylinder box are Michelson's "timings," titles of the narrative sections, and sometimes a few linguistic or ethnographic comments. (The "timings" are numbers from a horizontal gauge affixed to the dictaphone machine, measuring the left to right movement of the recording needle.) The notes from the cylinder boxes are found in the Archive of Folk Culture documentation for this collection.

Since all of the cylinders were recorded by Billy (presumably at one location during the 1911 field trip), performer, date, and location will not be listed separately for each catalog entry. Billy sometimes did not start speaking as soon as Michelson began recording; delayed starts of more than fifteen seconds will be indicated by the presence of a timing before the first item in the program.

Michelson's fieldnotes and manuscripts are in the National Anthropological Archives, Smithsonian Institution.

DATES: October 1927; August-September 1928; June, September-October 1930; August-September 1931; June 1932

SPONSOR: Bureau of American Ethnology

PROVENANCE: National Archives
7th and Pennsylvania Avenues, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 3,252-3,339; 3,936-3,941

AFS NUMBERS: 10,698-10,707; 10,709-10,711; 10,718-10,722; 20,222

BAE CATALOG NUMBERS: 1720-1826; 1841-1879; 1928-1985

Sixty-five six-inch dictaphone cylinders and twenty-nine four-inch cylinders containing Winnebago Indian music, recorded on Frances Densmore's various field trips to Wisconsin and at her home in Red Wing, Minnesota. The specific recording dates between October 1927 and June 1932 are found in her diaries and in the reports in Explorations and Field-work of the Smithsonian Institution. She made additional trips to Wisconsin in 1935 and 1939, and had conferences in Red Wing with Winnebago Indians traveling between Wisconsin and Nebraska. Densmore submitted batches of cylinders and accompanying analyses to the BAE at least as early as September 1930; the last cylinders in the collection (AFS 20,222) arrived in July 1944. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

In 1940 Densmore submitted a 362-page analysis of Winnebago music, accompanied by transcriptions of 205 songs; later she provided a twenty-page summary manuscript. These papers are in the National Anthropological Archives (ms. 3261, Densmore Winnebago); neither was ever published. In the manuscripts, the songs are grouped into the following categories (page numbers are from the larger document):

Songs connected with the Winter Feast (bundle songs)	40
a) songs accompanied by slow rattling as men walked up to the opened bundles
b) songs accompanied by rapid drumming as men danced around the opened bundles
Songs of the Buffalo Dance	76
Songs of the Medicine Lodge	80
Songs connected with the Peyote cult	86
Songs connected with the treatment of the sick	136c
Songs connected with funeral and burial customs	186
War songs	200
Songs connected with World War I	225
Dance songs	241
Game songs	270
Songs connected with feasts	291
Dream songs	296
Love songs	300
Songs for little children	304

Notes paraphrased or quoted from either manuscript will be placed after the indication [MS]. The page numbers within the [MS] brackets, however, are from the full-length paper only; they refer to the pages on which the songs are discussed and are given in the same order as the songs are on the cylinder. Unless quotation marks are used, the notes are paraphrased summaries.

The Peyote material was recorded on four-inch cylinders. As Densmore wrote in her summary manuscript, "There are two branches of the peyote cult, one following the teaching and customs of John Rave who organized the cult in 1893-94 and the other following Jesse Clay whose customs contain less resemblance to those of the Christian Church." Clay, converted around 1912, apparently introduced many Arapaho songs into the Peyote ceremony. Densmore's collection includes songs from both branches. The songs of the John Rave group sometimes have texts including Jesus's name and/or references to Biblical phrases.

During her various field trips, Densmore used different and sometimes overlapping numbering systems. Cylinders 3,252-3,275 and 3,276-3,289 have field numbers 1-83 and 1-53 respectively (with several gaps in each series). These field numbers, written on box labels and heard on the announcements, are listed as a separate entry for the first part of the collection. Performer numbers ("Adam Thundercloud 17," for example) were also assigned and are found in the full-length manuscript. For the first series of cylinders, gaps in the performer number sequence can usually be filled in by consulting the field numbers; performer numbers derived thus from context are placed in brackets. Beginning with the cylinders recorded in June 1930 (cylinders 3,290ff), Densmore stopped assigning field numbers and used performer numbers alone.

When she turned to the tasks of organizing and analyzing her material, Densmore gave BAE numbers and transcription numbers only to those songs which she transcribed and intended to publish, not to those which she "discarded." She also provided an alphabetical sequence for songs within certain genres, for example, "Bear bundle feasting song (a)."

A concordance of Library of Congress cylinder numbers and Densmore's BAE numbers, transcription numbers, field, and performer numbers is provided on the following pages.

According to Densmore's manuscript, Minnie Logan also recorded a song, but that cylinder has not been located, so Mrs. Logan is not listed above as a performer. Some of the Winnebagos who sang for Densmore also made recordings for other ethnographers; see the songs by Winslow White Eagle in the Huron Smith collection. About fifteen years later, Charles Hofmann also recorded John Bearskin and Winslow White Eagle (see "American Indian Music in Wisconsin, Summer 1946," Journal of American Folklore 60 [1947]:289-93).

In 1980 and 1981 Nancy Oestreich Lurie (Anthropology, Milwaukee Public Museum) carried out research on the Densmore Winnebago cylinders under the sponsorship of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Lawrence Walker served as consultant on the Peyote music. The primary Winnebago consultants on traditional, i.e., non-Peyote, Winnebago songs were Wilbur Blackdeer, the late Emanuel Thundercloud, Benjamin Winneshiek, and Eli Youngthunder. Other traditionalist consultants were Ralph Mann and Dewey Smoke, the latter working with the assistance of his daughter, Janette Smoke Czarnecki. These Winnebago people provided translations, song reconstructions, and comments about origin, genre, and song function. Paraphrases and quotes excerpted from Lurie's material follow the indication [NOL] in the NOTES. In general, Lurie's consultants have been cited only when they differed with Densmore or amplified her classifications; their full comments and translations are available in the Archive of Folk Culture notes for this collection.

Lurie wishes to stress that the traditionalist Winnebago people cited above are basically opposed to recording their sacred music, a stricture which began to develop toward the end of the period in which Densmore worked with the Winnebago. The reason lies in Paul Radin's publication of sacred data obtained largely from Peyote converts (Radin 1923, 1945). Although they noted that most of Densmore's singers were Peyotists, contemporary traditionalist consultants were surprised that any traditionalists had recorded for her; they concluded that the earlier traditionalists either saw some good reason to make recordings or did not yet know how sacred information (which should only be obtained and repeated in ritual settings) could be disseminated for anyone to learn.

Since the recordings had been made, and since Densmore's unpublished manuscript has many errors, the consultants agreed to work with Lurie in order to correct the information for scholarly use and to identify sacred music in the earnest hope that it will be respected and not reproduced and played for frivolous reasons.

In this connection, and as an aid to people using this catalog, Lurie adds the following information concerning war-bundle and powwow songs. Radin collected detailed texts of war-bundle ceremonies (Radin 1923), but his discussion of this religious complex is misleading insofar as he designated them as clan war-bundles. Densmore, without actually having seen such ceremonies but using Radin as a guide, further confused the picture. Actually, these rituals concern lineage bundles. The traditional number of clans is twelve, but at one time there were many more than twelve bundles (over half a dozen are still active). Each bundle was begun or "tied" by an individual following a vision directive. The originators of these bundles are known by name, but the common practice outside of ritual occasions is to refer to the bundles by the family surname of the custodian. The ceremonies are referred to as feasts. Thus "war-bundle feast/ceremonies/songs," "feasts," "winter" or "mid-winter feasts" all refer to the same ritual complex.

In regard to powwow songs, many are old war songs which once had somewhat sacred connotations but are now considered secular powwow songs although the Winnebago know their origins. Thus there is no real disagreement between Densmore's identifications of war songs and modern consultants' designations of those recordings as powwow songs.

6) [5:03--Repetition of 1722].

PERFORMER John Henry (1), (2), (3)
LOCATION Trempeleau Bay, Galesville, Wisconsin
DATE October 1927

NOTES Cylinder possibly duplicated too slowly. Some distortion after 5:00. [ANNOUNCEMENTS at the beginning, at 1:03, 3:03, and 4:07]: ". . . would be #50"; "next song will be #50"; [inaudible]; "next song, 2." [MS:73-74, 57]: The feasting songs on this and the following cylinder form a set of five. Densmore stated that bundle songs came in series of five and in sets of ten or twelve. Each song was sung twice: during the first half (marked by a slow rattle beat), the people walked up to the opened bundles; during the second half (fast rattle beat), people danced. [NOL]: These songs belong to the Greendeer war-bundle.

The first song on this cylinder (No. 1) is too defective to be reproduced. Logan 2 is listed as the song he received in a peyote vision, which is contained in the mss. as No. 61. It is included in this group as Arthur Logan was an excellent singer and the songs may have musical interest." Also on the cylinder box: "L. 4 is dup. W.E. 19" (see BAE 1952 on cylinder 3,312).

COLLECTOR NUMBERS: Fletcher [Fl.] 182-185, 201, 211

Six four-inch cylinders, recorded by Alice C. Fletcher and Francis La Flesche in September 1897 and March 1900, probably on the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska. The cylinders, part of the Bureau of American Ethnology collection, were transferred to the Library from the National Archives in 1948. Genres represented include Medicine Lodge songs, war songs, love songs, lonesome songs, and flute melodies.

As "Special Indian Agent for the Winnebago Indians" from 1887 to 1889, Fletcher had supervised the land allotments for the tribe. Among her materials at the National Anthropological Archives are miscellaneous notes on Winnebago ethnology dating from that period to the turn of the century, but only one Winnebago song transcription is included. That game song (NAA ms. 4558: [53]) is not found on these cylinders. Some of her notes on the Medicine Lodge gathered from Joseph Lamere, however, may be useful background both for the Medicine Lodge songs noted here and for similar songs collected by Paul Radin in 1908-12.

Cylinder 863 was recorded by Francis La Flesche. See also his October 1895 recording of Ardent Saunsoci, an Omaha, singing five Winnebago Medicine Lodge songs (cylinder 833, cataloged with the Fletcher Omaha cylinder collection). As the latter recording indicates, Nebraska groups were using songs that originated among neighboring tribes. One of the Medicine Lodge songs in the Fletcher Winnebago collection is attributed to the Potawatomis, and a flute melody is listed as "Sac and Fox."

A picture of Henry Rice Hill, mistakenly identified as "James" (his son), is found in Paul Radin's "The Winnebago Tribe" (37th Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, 1915-1916, plate 8c).

The flute melodies in this collection can be compared with the Winnebago flute song recorded by Noah La Flesche in 1909 for Charles Wakefield Cadman (see the Cadman Omaha collection in the Plains catalog) and with flute melodies recorded by Densmore and Radin (see their Winnebago music collections in this catalog).

Twenty-six six-inch dictaphone cylinders recorded by Paul Radin among the Nebraska Winnebago people. Radin began his fieldwork in 1908 and had finished most of his collecting by 1912, at which time he wrote up his material for the BAE. With the exception of the recordings by Jasper Blowsnake, whom Radin met in 1909, the cylinders have been assigned the 1908-12 range of dates. They were transferred from the National Archives to the Library of Congress in 1948.

Radin made passing references to the use of cylinders for recording music as well as narratives (for example, "The Culture of the Winnebago," International Journal of American Linguistics, Supplement 15, no. 1 [1949]:5), but he omitted any discussion of the music he collected or of Winnebago music in general from his ethnography on the grounds that the subject required "specific training and knowledge" which he did not have ("The Winnebago Tribe," 37th Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, 1915-1916 [1923]:47).

Radin recorded many cylinders, some of which are in the collection of the Archives of Traditional Music at Indiana University. Among Radin's fieldnotes, which are housed in the American Philosophical Society Library in Philadelphia, are what appear to be song texts and performers' names for particular cylinders (folder 497.3 R114, Winnebago 1, #3, Ethnographic notes). These notes may refer to cylinders that are not in the Library of Congress collections, but we have tentatively assigned performers for some of Radin's cylinders based on genre and text correspondences. The fieldnotes are cited as "APS:[page number]," referring to page numbers assigned to the notes by the American Philosophical Society Library.

Nancy Oestreich Lurie carried out research for the purpose of identifying these recordings, supported by a grant from the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research, Inc. In 1982 and 1983 she worked on song reconstructions and translations with four Winnebago consultants: Wilbur Blackdeer, in regard to traditional materials; Lawrence Walker, Daniel and Rosella Mallory, in regard to Peyote material. Genre, textual, and source comments paraphrased from Lurie's report are in the NOTES following the indication [NOL].

Cylinders with labels or enclosed documentation include material from the following genres:

- Bear Clan songs
- Black Root songs
- Grizzly Bear songs
- Night songs
- Paint songs
- Peyote songs and talk
- Sore Eye songs
- Talk on the Night Feast
- Water songs

Lurie's Winnebago consultants clarified and, in several cases, relabeled some of these types.

They added genre designations for some previously unidentified cylinders:

Buffalo Clan war-bundle songs
Buffalo Dance songs
Flute melody
Night Spirit songs of the Thunder Clan
Thunder songs

The songs of the various bundle and clan ceremonies were obtained from recent converts to the Peyote religion, a source of controversy among traditional Winnebagos from Radin's day to the present. (See Radin's account of the controversy in The Road of Life and Death, Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1945, pp. 35-49.) As Lurie noted in her report, none of the Peyote songs in this collection are of Winnebago origin, the religion having been newly acquired from neighboring Nebraska groups in the early 1900s. The practice of learning songs from nearby people is evident in the non-Peyote repertoire as well; some of the traditional songs are in Central Algonquian languages.

Some of the cylinder boxes have the pencilled date "March 1942" and initials which the recording engineer reads as "G.D." or "L.D." The initials are "F.D.," standing for Frances Densmore, who examined and tentatively identified BAE cylinder collections in February-March 1942. The date does not refer to the time when the recordings were made.

WINNEBAGO INDIAN MUSIC

THE HURON H. SMITH COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Huron H. Smith (1883-1933)

PERFORMERS: Huron H. Smith and Winslow White Eagle

LOCATION: Wisconsin

DATE: Summer 1928

SPONSOR: Milwaukee Public Museum

PROVENANCE: Milwaukee Public Museum
800 W. Wells
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53233

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 6,823-6,824

AFS NUMBER: 8903: A2-A4

Two six-inch dictaphone cylinders of Winnebago music recorded by Huron H. Smith, received by exchange from the Milwaukee Public Museum in 1947. The names of the performers, the date, and the song genres are found on cylinder box labels and enclosed notes.

On some of the exchange documents the cylinders were attributed to Samuel A. Barrett, but he was on an expedition in Africa between June 1928 and April 1929. Will Carleton McKern (b. 1892), the associate curator of anthropology at the Milwaukee Museum at the time the recordings were made, has identified Huron Smith as the recordist. Smith, curator of botany, had spent the summer of 1928 with the Winnebago people, noting ethnographic as well as ethnobotanic features. His article in the Yearbook of the Public Museum of the City of Milwaukee 1928 includes the text of the Winnebago Peyote Lord's Prayer (p. 79), one of the songs on these cylinders. "S-1" (probably "Smith-1") is written on one of the cylinder boxes. The enclosed note gives the date "November 7, 1928" (this may be when the cylinders were registered at the museum rather than the recording date) and the name "White Eagle Winslow." This is the same Winslow White Eagle who performed songs of traditional genres (Green Corn, Night Spirit songs, etc.) for Frances Densmore in September 1930. The note also suggests that Smith himself sang several songs on the cylinder.

Research on these cylinders was carried out in 1981 and 1984 by Nancy Oestreich Lurie under the sponsorship of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Two of her Winnebago consultants, the late Emanuel Thundercloud and his wife, identified some of the songs in the collection. Comments and classifications derived from Lurie's notes follow the indication [NOL].

DESCRIPTION	1) [Green Corn song]. 2) [:40--Green Corn or Flag Dance song]. 3) [1:10--Peyote song]. 4) [2:16--Peyote "Lord's Prayer"].
PERFORMER	[Huron Smith 1), 2)]; Winslow White Eagle 3), 4)
LOCATION	Wisconsin
DATE	[November 7], 1928
NOTES	Probably a different singer on 3) and 4) than on 1) and 2). [ENCLOSED NOTE]: "White Eagle Winslow. Nov. 7, 1928. 1. Green Corn 2. Green Corn 3. Flag Dance 4. Peyote ceremony 5. Peyote prayer" (the first three items are bracketed and followed by the word "Smith"; the last two are bracketed and followed by "Winslow"). The label does not correspond clearly with the recorded items, unless there are two Green Corn songs in the first 40 seconds, or perhaps a portion of the cylinder was not duplicated. [NOL]: 3) Peyote song; the words seem to be Winnebago. 4) is the same as the Peyote "Lord's Prayer" sung for Densmore [AFS 10,721: B6].

DESCRIPTION	[Unidentified song, probably Medicine Lodge song.]
PERFORMER	[Winslow White Eagle or Huron Smith]
LOCATION	[Wisconsin]
DATE	[November 7], 1928
NOTES	Song with many verses or repetitions, ending with whoop. [LABEL]: "Two peyote songs or/and song 1 repeated." This is not, however, a Peyote song. [NOL]: The consultant identified this as a Medicine Lodge song, "sung in Winnebago but not by a Winnebago." Translation: "Whatever they are praying for is on the way [is appearing]."

SOUTHEASTERN INDIAN CATALOG

FOREWORD

The preservation of American Indian traditions is important, for they form an integral part of American cultural history. We are thus indebted to the collectors represented in this Southeastern catalog for their pioneering efforts in documenting the materials cited. Although representative cylinders from specific tribes have been duplicated previously and made available on magnetic recording tape, we now will have all of this early data in a useable form.

Much of the material in this catalog emanates from the field trips of Frances Densmore, a tireless collector who represented the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. Although difficulties exist with regard to some of her field techniques, we nevertheless should appreciate her interest in preserving these examples of musical styles. Densmore made several trips to the Seminole reservations between 1931 and 1933 to assemble the largest body of music contained in this catalog. In 1932 she made a few recordings of Alabama and Calusa examples. She visited the Mississippi Choctaw in 1933 and succeeded in securing a comprehensive sample. Having these complete collections to study will allow us to expand our present knowledge of Southeastern tribal musics, yet I anticipate that they may ultimately pose more questions than they answer.

In addition to Catawba songs recorded in 1913 by Truman Michelson, linguistic data have also been preserved in these collections. Frans M. Olbrechts' Cherokee cylinders from 1927 include not only songs but also examples of the spoken word. Tales and other verbal data of the Chitimacha in Louisiana were recorded in 1934 by Morris Swadesh. Apart from the scholarly interest in these languages, especially as it relates to comparative studies of the Southeast, practical considerations are also present. Many tribes are now developing native language programs in an effort to restore and protect their heritage, and we hope that making this material available will encourage other tribes to pursue similar projects.

Of the repertories represented in this catalog, I am most familiar with the Mississippi Choctaw music. Using this example, I may offer some observations regarding the use of the recordings for both present and future research. In an article on Choctaw songs, Densmore published a number of musical transcriptions (1943, cf. Selected Bibliography). In these she indicated only the primary melodic outline, without notating many significant details essential to defining the tribe's performance style. Access to the original cylinder recordings will thus assist us in providing more accurate and thorough transcriptions. With the introduction of mechanical transcription equipment, we are more sophisticated than scholars were fifty years ago in the presentation of musical examples. Accuracy becomes crucial in this context since the validity and usefulness of subsequent study, including analysis and comparison, often reflect the quality of the musical transcriptions.

Except in isolated instances, Densmore also neglected to include textual underlay. Indeed, she only acknowledges the rare occurrence of lexical items, whereas the songs are mainly comprised of vocables. It now becomes possible to incorporate the latter when studying these songs anew. If we are ever to understand the role of vocables in American Indian repertories, this information becomes essential.

The Choctaw have forgotten some of their dance songs, including certain examples performed on Densmore's cylinders. The accessibility of the music in a useable form will assist tribal song leaders, should they wish to expand their repertory in the future.

This loss of repertory is but one facet of a larger theoretical issue: the question of musical change. Approximately fifty years have elapsed between Densmore's and my own recordings. A comparison of both will contribute to our understanding of this important musical process. For example, are structural aspects of songs retained longer, as we suspect, than their specific content? How do the songs which are now performed relate to the earlier repertory? These are only a few of the questions we need to resolve. We may expect that scholars studying contemporary performance practices will be able to suggest, through comparisons to early recordings, some solutions to these thorny problems. These comments concern only some of the ways in which this material can be used. Observations pertaining to the Choctaw examples may apply as well to other tribes represented in the collections.

The Federal Cylinder Project concludes with its preservation, archiving, and dissemination phases. It is my hope that this material will be used both by Native Americans, in preserving and renewing their ceremonial past, and by ethnomusicologists and other scholars, who are trying to help us understand this music.

INTRODUCTION

Although James Mooney recorded Oklahoma Caddo Indian music as early as 1894, serious recording of the music of Southeastern Indians did not begin until Frank G. Speck recorded Creek and Yuchi Indian songs and dances around 1905. There are relatively few early sound recordings of Southeastern Indian music in contrast to the volumes of material from Plains, Southwestern, and Northwestern tribes; field recordings made in the Southeast are particularly rare. In fact, apart from the occasional paragraph in descriptive accounts written by missionaries, explorers, and travelers during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, until the late 1880s comparatively little scholarly attention was paid to the music of Indian peoples living in the southeastern United States.[1] Indeed, some scholars in the early part of this century assumed that much traditional Indian music had disappeared from the region and that there was little to be learned from research in the field.

Contrary to these assumptions, traditional Indian music continued to flourish throughout the Southeast. Beginning in the mid-1880s, the Bureau of American Ethnology sent linguists and ethnographers to Southeastern reservations in an effort to capture the languages and traditions of the remnant groups before the last native speakers and traditionalists died, and many recordings of songs and dances were made almost as an afterthought by linguists whose principal interests were texts and phonetics. Ethnologists were particularly drawn by survivals of the elaborate ceremonial complex characteristic of Southeastern Indians before conquest. James Mooney was one of the first BAE researchers to conduct extensive fieldwork in the Southeast, working principally on Cherokee medicine, religion, and mythology in North Carolina. In the decades just before and after the turn of the century, surprisingly few bureau scholars followed in his path; two of the more widely published ethnologists working in the Southeast between 1900 and 1940 were Frank G. Speck, who worked principally with Catawba and Yuchi narratives, and John R. Swanton, who in addition to field work on Caddo, Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek reservations, synthesized documentary sources on Southeastern Indians in what remains the definitive work on that subject.[2]

All of the cylinders included in this catalog were recorded in the Southeast and most were recorded by Frances Densmore, a collaborator for the Bureau of American Ethnology who was beyond a doubt the most prolific recordist of Native American music. Although Densmore had been collecting American Indian music since the early part of this century, she did not begin field research on Southeastern Indian music until the 1930s. Her cylinder recordings of Alabama, Calusa, Choctaw, and Seminole music were made in a series of field trips over a three year span from January 1931 to February 1933. She also visited the Louisiana Chitimacha in an unfruitful field trip in 1932.

The three other cylinder collections presented in this catalog were recorded by linguists and ethnologists. Frans M. Olbrechts, an anthropologist from Belgium, recorded Cherokee dance songs at the Big Cove, North Carolina, reservation while researching supplementary material for the James Mooney manuscript on Cherokee sacred formulas. Louisiana Chitimacha songs and texts were recorded in 1934 by Morris Swadesh, and Truman Michelson recorded a few Catawba songs during an apparently abortive search for linguistic data around 1913.

Each of these collectors felt Southeastern Indian culture to be rapidly and irrevocably disappearing; indeed, the seven Calusa hunting songs recorded by Frances Densmore were only ghosts in the repertoire of Seminole song leader Billy Stewart. They sought out the last fluent speakers of Southeastern languages and those who kept to the old ways, people of special vision who were sometimes at odds with their communities. Most songs were recorded indoors in churches, schools, and homes, outside the contexts in which they were meant to be performed—social songs and dances became private, personal encounters between recordist and informant. Some performers recorded reluctantly, others with a sense of urgency about the future; they too felt their culture slipping away. At times the impulse to record tribal songs and narratives for outsiders was greeted by a community with suspicion and hostility—pressure from fellow Seminoles forced Josie Billie to stop recording for Densmore. Will West Long, whose knowledge of Cherokee culture was tapped by Frans Olbrechts and over a half dozen other ethnologists, found the dual need to preserve culture and preserve cultural secrets a constant tension in his life. In an obituary which appeared in American Anthropologist in 1948, John Witthoft eulogized Will West Long as a man whose "knowledge of Cherokee culture and . . . ability in the interpretation of the Cherokee language were second to none."

> He believed the knowledge he carried was of very real power, and its potentiality for good or evil strong. On the one hand, he wanted to see it preserved and interpreted, and he needed the wages he received for his work; on the other, he was always afraid of exposing himself and his people to ridicule, and he was never sure that the people who hired him did not use his information for commercial, and perhaps even antisocial, purposes.[3]

The focus of ethnomusicological research has shifted since the beginning of this century. Frances Densmore and other collectors of her day regarded the individual song as the proper unit of study and paid less attention to the social and ceremonial contexts in which these songs were imbedded—Densmore in particular tended to omit such elements as opening and closing formulas, repetitions, and paramusical whoops from her transcriptions, analyses, and recordings. But contemporary ethnomusicologists such as Charlotte Heth, Marcia Herndon, and David Draper point out that these seemingly extraneous elements are in fact integral to the structure and meaning of Southeastern Indian music and reflect a deeper Southeastern world view which binds together social structure, musical structure, and religious symbolism under a powerful and all-encompassing philosophy.

Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 3,523-3,557; 3,740-3,743

AFS NUMBERS: 10,736-10,739; 21,266

BAE CATALOG NUMBERS: 2217-2262

Thirty-nine four-inch cylinders recorded by Frances Densmore in Livingston, Texas, December 21 and 22, 1932, under a grant from the National Research Council. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948. Densmore had apparently intended to record at the Big Sandy Village on the Alabama Reservation, but bad weather and slippery roads prevented her from doing so. Instead, State Indian Agent Hobby Galloway brought Alabama tribal leader Charles Martin Thompson (Mikko Sun-Ke) to the town of Livingston, and the recordings were made in the county courthouse. Thompson, the only performer on the Alabama recordings, had a deep knowledge of Alabama Indian culture and had been consulted by a number of researchers.

Densmore published her findings, transcriptions, and analyses to twenty of the Alabama songs in a 1937 article entitled "The Alabama Indians and Their Music," in Straight Texas. Her manuscripts relating to the study of Alabama music are located at the National Anthropological Archives, Smithsonian Institution. These include transcriptions and tabulated analyses of forty-seven of the sixty-two recorded songs and three reports for the Bureau of American Ethnology.

She recorded and transcribed songs of the following genres:

1. Alligator Dance song
2. Buffalo Dance song
3. Chicken Dance song
4. Corn Dance song
5. Duck Dance song
6. Frog Dance song
7. Horse Dance song
8. Nateka Dance song
9. Quail Dance song
10. Rabbit Dance song
11. Terrapin Dance song
12. Woman's Dance song

She included transcribed examples of all but two of these types in her published article: Alligator Dance songs were mentioned in passing and Quail Dance songs were not described at all. Densmore gave genre letters—for example, Corn Dance song (e)—and BAE catalog numbers to all of the songs transcribed in her manuscripts. She assigned separate numbers and genre letters to the transcribed songs included in her published article; in the catalog the numbers appear in brackets following the citation.

CATAWBA INDIAN MUSIC

THE TRUMAN MICHELSON COLLECTION

COLLECTOR: Truman Michelson? (1879-1938)

PERFORMERS: Billy Harris; other performers not identified

LOCATION: South Carolina

DATE: May 1913

SPONSOR: Bureau of American Ethnology

PROVENANCE: National Archives
7th and Pennsylvania Avenues, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 8,671-8,674

AFS NUMBER: 21,352

Four six-inch dictaphone cylinders tentatively identified as Catawba Indian music, recorded by Truman Michelson in South Carolina in May 1913. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

The sound quality is quite poor for this collection, and there is virtually no documentation—only one cylinder box is labeled. The cylinders were assigned to the Truman Michelson collection on the basis of the following note in the Thirty-fourth Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, 1912-1913: "A considerable number of native songs are still remembered by the surviving Catawba, nearly all of which Dr. Michelson succeeded in recording by dictaphone" (p. 17).

Washington, D.C. 20408

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 1,630-1,644

AFS NUMBERS: 15,098-15,099

Fifteen six-inch dictaphone wax cylinders recorded by Frans M. Olbrechts in Big Cove, North Carolina, in 1927, under the sponsorship of the Bureau of American Ethnology. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

Frans Olbrechts recorded these cylinders while conducting field research for his work on The Swimmer Manuscript by James Mooney. Annotations for the individual entries in this collection were derived from Olbrechts's notes to The Swimmer Manuscript, the collection of Olbrechts's papers at the Smithsonian Institution National Anthropological Archives, and Cherokee Dance and Drama by Frank G. Speck and Leonard Broom. Additional documentation was supplied by Charlotte Heth and Laura Hughes.

In addition to several narrative items including a folktale, numerals from one to twenty, a speech in the Cherokee Council, and a lecture from the Cherokee New Testament, the Olbrechts collection includes the following song types:

1. Ball Game Dance songs
2. Bear Dance songs
3. Bear hunting songs
4. Buffalo Dance song
5. Eagle Dance song
6. Friendship or Mixed Dance song
7. Frog Dance song
8. Groundhog Dance song
9. Prayer song
10. Mask or Booger Dance songs
11. Medicine songs
12. Pipe Dance song
13. Round or Running Dance song
14. Turkey hunting song
15. War cry
16. Women-gathering-wood Dance song

105 South Fifth Street
Philadelphia, Pa. 19106

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 4,478-4,499

AFS NUMBERS: 18,472-18,473

Fifteen six-inch dictaphone and seven four-inch wax cylinders recorded by Morris Swadesh in Charenton, Louisiana, in June 1931 and September 1934. These cylinders were received by exchange from the American Philosophical Society in 1970.

Swadesh was primarily interested in linguistic data and, as far as we know, did not publish or transcribe any of the songs or texts from this collection. He gave a brief description of his 1934 field trip in an article entitled "Sociologic Notes on Obsolescent Languages," International Journal of American Linguistics 14 (October 1948): 226-35.

Fifty-four wax cylinders (two duplicates) recorded by Frances Densmore in Mississippi in January 1933, under a grant from the National Research Council. The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

Densmore recorded 103 separate items, excluding duplicates, of which 18 are repetitions of transcribed songs. She included transcriptions of 65 Choctaw songs in her Bureau of American Ethnology manuscript, Choctaw Music. The remaining 20 songs she either did not identify or did not consider important enough to transcribe.

Since Densmore's monograph includes two lists of song types, arranged according to her own classification system, only general headings are given below. Readers should refer to pages 107-10 in Choctaw Music for a more thorough listing.

1. Bear Dance songs
2. Chicken Dance songs
3. Drunken-man Dance songs
4. Duck Dance songs
5. Game songs
6. Hunting song
7. Pleasure dance song
8. Quail Dance song
9. Snake Dance songs
10. Songs connected with pastimes
11. Steal-partner Dance songs
12. Stomp Dance songs
13. Terrapin Dance songs
14. Tick Dance songs
15. Turkey Dance songs
16. War songs

BAE CATALOG NUMBERS: 2072-2191; 2273-2317; 2384-2463

One-hundred thirty four-inch wax cylinders (seven duplicates) of Seminole Indian music recorded by Frances Densmore in Florida between 1931 and 1933, under the sponsorship of the Bureau of American Ethnology and the National Research Council. The Seminole collection also includes Calusa Indian music, which is cataloged below (p. 416). The cylinders were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

Densmore recorded 301 separate Seminole items, of which 24 are repetitions. She transcribed 243 of these for her Bureau of American Ethnology monograph, Seminole Music (Smithsonian Institution, Bulletin no. 161, Washington, D.C., 1956), to which the citations in the notes refer. The other 34 were not transcribed. It should be noted that although Densmore distinguishes between songs sung by the Cow Creek and Cypress Swamp groups of Seminole people in her publications,[1] she did not make these distinctions in her catalog. Therefore it may be helpful to remember that Josie Billie (Panther) and Charlie Billie were singers from Cypress Swamp, and that Billie Stewart (who also recorded the Calusa songs; see below), Susie Tiger, and Billy Bowlegs were members of the Cow Creek group.

Since two extensive lists of Seminole song types are included in Densmore's monograph, only general headings are given below:

1. Alligator Dance songs
2. Ball Game songs
3. Bird Dance songs
4. Blackbird Dance song
5. Black Grass Dance songs
6. Buffalo Dance songs
7. Buzzard Dance songs
8. Catfish Dance songs
9. Chicken Dance songs
10. Children's dances
11. Corn Dance songs
12. Crawfish Dance songs
13. Drinking songs
14. Drunken Dance songs
15. Fox Dance songs
16. Hair Dance songs
17. Hinata Dance songs
18. Hunting songs
19. Hunting Dance songs
20. Lizard Dance songs

22. Quail Dance songs
23. Rabbit Dance song
24. Sandhill Crane Dance songs
25. Screech Owl Dance songs
26. Skunk Dance songs
27. Snake Dance songs

28. Songs of an Old Dance
29. Songs of Medicine Men's Dance
30. Songs with stories
31. Songs with treatment of the sick
32. Steal-partner Dance songs
33. Stomp Dance songs
34. Switchgrass Dance songs
35. Turkey Dance song
36. Two-direction Dance songs
37. Whooping Crane Dance songs
38. Old Man's Dance songs

The side and band numbers of cylinders selected for the Folkways record album, Songs of the Seminole Indians of Florida (FE 4383), recorded by Frances Densmore, are enclosed in brackets in the NOTES.

CALUSA INDIAN MUSIC

PERFORMER: Billie Stewart (d. 1938)

LOCATION: Brighton, Florida

DATE: February 12, 1932

CYLINDER NUMBERS: 3,424-3,427; 3,744

AFS NUMBERS: 10,728; 21,262

BAE CATALOG NUMBERS: 2064-2071

Five wax cylinders recorded by Frances Densmore in Florida on February 12, 1932, under the sponsorship of the Bureau of American Ethnology. The cylinders are part of a larger collection of Seminole Indian music, and were transferred from the National Archives in 1948.

Densmore transcribed all eight of the Calusa songs in this collection for her Seminole Music monograph (pp. 59-65). A break in the sequence of performer numbers suggests that she recorded a sixth cylinder of Calusa songs which has not yet been located and which she may have discarded. The Calusa songs were a part of the repertoire of Billie Stewart, a song leader for the Cow Creek Seminoles, who said that "long ago the Calusa and Seminole camped near one another and the people of each camp visited freely in the other, learning the songs and joining in the dances" (p. 59). Only two song types were recorded: Corn Dance and Hunting Dance songs.
